A popular figure in the West for his earthiness and outgoing personality, he was not always so well loved at home. Kruschev was regarded in the west as the supreme political gambler. Few statesmen in this century enjoyed the limelight so inuch—and even fewer were in-troversy. In international affairs he preached peaceful co-existence, but his policies were often regarded as dangerous hrinkstanks into Budapest. He sup-plied Soviet missiles to Cuba in 1962 and accused Mao Tse-tung of "treachery, savage vengeance and deceit." But he also signed the 1963 nuclear test han treaty with the West; curbed the power of the Soviet Union's secret police and put more consumer goods within the reach of the Soviet family man.

The news of his death trickled out of Moscow slowly and many world leaders reserved comment firmed. But Senator Edward Kennedy, hrother of the late President Kennedy, Kruschev's regarded as dangerous hrinks greatest political adversary, said in London that he was "sorrowed" at the news. COLOUR

"During the fateful days of the Cuban missile crisis, when the world stood on the brink of a nuclear holocaust, Premier Kruschev wisely chose to put the cause of peace and the fate of mankind above national interest," he said. "That decision stands as his hallmark on the international scene. I join with the Soviet people in extending understanding and sympathy to Mrs Kruschev and her family."

Famine children 'robbed of rations'

By Saced Naqni, New Delhi

A TEAM of specialists in nutrition, appointed by the Indian Government to examine malnutrition among refugee children from East Bengal, has told the Cabinet here, in a secret report, that the Indian authorities might he held guilty of infantleide if immediate remedial measures were not devised to tackle the problem. The study team—Dr V. Ramalingaswami, director of the All-India Institute of Medical Sciences, and Dr B. N Tandon, nutrition expert at the Institute, said that an estimated 100,000 infants and pre-school children may die in the next few months unless relief is rushed in on an emergency basis and scrupu-lously distributed.

gastroenteritis, smallpox, chicken

pox, measels and conjunctivitis. More than 50 per cent of the cases studied fell into either moderate of severe degrees of this category, the report says

It is estimated that two million children helow the age of eight, about 500,000 below the age of five, and 500,000 lactating mothers are now suffering from serious

Every occupant of the refugee camps above the age of eight is expected to get a daily ration of 400 gms of rice, 100 gms of pulses and 300 gms of vegetables, mostly potato and onion; children helow eight get half the quantity.

But the team makes the alarming observation that, in many camps, refugees and their children are not getting the full rations. This, by implication, means either that there is total mismanagement or that rations are finding their way on to the hlack market.

Another observation made by the team is that children and mothers remained severely undernourished "adult males in the refugee homes ate considerably more than their share of the rations and were in relatively hetter health.' The Government has accepted the report's recommendations by asking all voluntary and other agencies to co-ordinate their efforts under the umbrella of the Indian Red Cross and help implement a £21 million entergency rescue project.

STILL unaccustomed to the sights and sounds of every-day life, Geoff-rey Jackson, Britain's kidnapped amhassador, hlinked and smiled as he came out of the aircraft into hright sunshine at Gatwick yesterday. He was given a truly royal welcome. As the Hawker Siddeley executive jet came to a stop and the engines died, the Queen's representative, Lord Hamilton and the Foreign Secretary, Sir Alex Douglas Home, went to greet him. A few minutes later it was disclosed that he had heen given a knighthood-Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George The Order, founded in 1818, is for high diplomatic services abroad.

Mr Jackson, in navy hlazer and cavalry twills, walked with his wife, Evelyn, and his son, Anthony, to a hattery of microphones. "This is your greatest day," Sir Alec your greatest day," Sir Alec Douglas-Home fold Mr Jackson, and I don't want to intrude upon it, except to say that everyone in this country knows the name of Jackson and everyone is delighted that you are back in Britain, freed after your great ordeal."

Mr Jackson said he came back with apologies and thanks: "A lot

"Only platitudes seem to fit, platitudes that are literally dreams come true, on a wonderful day like this, after a period of time as an amhassador when sometimes I felt a hit more extraordinary than plenipotentiary."

He looked pale and slightly drawn after his ordeal. "I am very tired," he said. He thanked the Press for the kindness and compassion shown to his wife. He repeated his message in Spanish and French and then, with his family he was driven away for a rest in the country.

Tim Brown reports from Madrid: Mr Jackson was reunited with his family in Madrid when his Iberia Airlines flight 998 arrived two hours late from South America. 'I don't really care how late the plane is so long as my hushand arrives safely." Mrs Jackson said. She had flown from Stansted with her son and daughter-in-law.

Valerie, in the morning.

She waited in the Hawker Siddeley jet as the Spanish DC8 touched down. From the pilot's cabin she watched the 80 passengers disembark, but did not see her husband, who was last to leave the out-of-view first-class section in the front of the plane. He squeezed into a tiny mini-van which raced him to the reunion with his wife he had not expected until he reached England.

Only five minutes before his plane had touched down at Madrid he had no idea his wife was waiting for him. A radio message was flashed through to the pilot, Captain Teodosio Pombo, 37, the only man allowed to speak to Mr Jackson during the flight. "I left the flight deck and went hack to Mr Jackson's seat in the first-class compartment to break the news," said Captain Pomho. "He was very emotional. He hroke down and wept. During the flight we conversed in Spaniah. Mr Jackson was obviously still very tired. He dld not, of course, want to apeak about his months of capti-vity. Nor did I want to raise the subject."

Air hostess Amelia Callejon, 21, who looked after Mr Jackson, said: "He was such a kind man. He wanted so little on the journey.
Just a few cups of tea and sandwiches. I offered him drinks, but he refused. He was very interested to read the British newspaper reports about his release. Then he would sleep fitfully."

Rip tides sweep away bathers

THE NUMBER of swimmers drowned from West Country beaches this summer is up by 50 per cent on last year. The number of rescues made by lifesavers has doubled and formerly safe hathing areas have become dangerous. The reason, say the lifesavers, lies beneath the surface in the movements of the sands. These bave set up powerful "rip" currents which literally rip the swimmer's legs from under him when he is standing in his depth. Not since the 1930s have they been so powerful

Each year thousands of tons of sand are brought in with the surf on to the heaches of Devon and Cornwall. The sand is deposited on top of the stable heach sandbank but hy the eroding process of the spring tides, gullies are formed (see diagram).

The larger the amount of sand brought in, the greater the eventual depth of the gullies, or "vellahs" as they are called locally. The deeper the vellab the more powerful the rip current set

The sand has been brought in and eroded away like this since Neolithic times, but this year has been one of the most dramatic. Some heaches have had up to eight feet of sand piled on them and the resulting rip currents have produced the main source of danger to swimmers. The lifesavers' records from the north coast of Devon and Comwall are grim: Porthtowan: 50 rescues, more than the total for the last 15 years. Perranporth: 80 rescues, Jouhle last year's total.

Bude: 40 rescues, double last year's total. North Devon (Woolacombe): 40 rescues, double last year's total.

Tony Blackman, chairman of the Cornwall region of the Surf Lifesaving Association (there are 50 branches in the West Country and South Wales), says that once caught in a rip current it can be impossible to swim against it.

Your only chance is to swim across it and hope that you can attract the attention of a lifesaver from the beach. It is possible, however, to recognise the areas where the rip tide currents are flowing. The surf line will he broken and there will only be small waves-or none at all if the rip current is really strong. On the south coastline there is another theory for the formation of the currents. Heavy rains on Dartmoor during the summer have resulted in swollen rivers and new and deeper channels being cut at their mouths. The contours of the sandbank immediately hefore the sbore could also have been changed hy the more forceful flow of water from the rivers.

New heach surveys will prohably he carried out by Devon and Cornwall councils after their advisory committee of heach lifesaving has assessed the significance of the rip currents. The committee's campaign to educate the public on the dangers of swimming in the sea resulted in a drop in the number drowned from 32 in 1968 to 14 in 1969. Last year it was 16 but this year's total has already reached 24.

Illegal drink in a Merthyr school

Illegal milk-sippers defy Mrs Thatcher unprecedented and growing revolt by local authorities and medical officers against Mrs Thatcher's ban on free school milk for children from seven to 11. Thousands more are being drawn in as other authorities explore loopholes to provide hot soup, yogburt, coffee or cocoa free, as a substitute for milk. And in areas where the Act is being applied there's criticism of its effect.

One Birmingham primary head-master sald last week: "We are catching children ruling scrap food bins which are given to pigs.
They do this because they are so bungry. Free milk is necessary here."

The Education (Milk) Act came into effect on September 1. It says that supplies of free school milk, first started in 1944, must stop for children from an average age of 7½ to 11—except on medical grounds. Because regulations were sent to authorities less than a week before school terms began, medical officers have been unable to examine many children who may qualify for free milk.

In Birmingham, which has accepted the new law, all regular school clinical work has been school clinical work has been suspended while the city's 20 medical officers conduct examinations to determine which children need milk at school. But the City's education department wrote to parents about the application pro-cedure in English only. Many Asian children have not been examined because their parents do not read English.

At some schools, mothers bave been handing cups of milk over the playground fences to their children, and headmasters have had to segregate children who qualify for free milk from the others who look on and sometimes try to snatch bottles.

The Birmingham Education Committee face an incipient revolt among their medical officers who are interpreting the medical exemption clause liberally. At Benson Junior School, Merthyr council recently con-firmed its decision, made carlier firmed its decision, made carrier in the year, against the advice of the treasurer by a vote of 23-2. Individual councillors are now liable to be surebarged for all illegal payments made by the council while they continue to supply milk free to children.

Merthyr's fierce pride in past educational achievements, like the creation of the first free secondary school in Britain in 1913. is reinforced by memories of the depression. Today unemployment stands at 8 per cent, more than double the national average. Councillor Bryn Watkins, a former mayor, said, "We know about poverty, malnutrition, rickets and TB in this town, and we will not countenance the and we will not countenance the erosion of the welfare state.'

Despite pressure from the Scottish Education Department, Ayrshire, Dunbarton and Midlothian will continue to give free milk for all children.

Glasgow and Fife will also provide milk illegally until their medical officers report on the numbers medically entitled. But first reports from Glasgow indi-

Most authorities in England fighting the ban are looking for legal loopholes. Manchester and Salford, for instance, believe an additive to milk such as coffee, or a milkbased substitute such as or a milkbased substitute such as vogurt provided free remains legitimate. The suggestion, bowever, from one authority, that a single grain of rice in a bottle of milk would make it qualify as rice pudding is unlikely to Another loophole may have been exposed, unwittingly, by Mrs Thatcher herself. Replying to Frank Allaun (MP for Salford E) in the Commons on July 8 about an anomaly concerning school meal charges, she said, "Authorities . . . bave powers to provide benefits such as breakfasts and mid-morning refresh ments free or at nominal charge for any pupil who has a long Inner London boroughs can take advantage of another loophole. They are allowed to spend the product of an old Id rate on any "general community purpose," irrespective of Government wishes. Up to nine of the 12 boroughs, all Labour-controlled, are discussing legal arrangements with the Inner London Education Authority whom they will pay to supply free milk.

The Department of Education and Science bas so far taken no steps to crack down on defiant authorities. It has the power to demand extraordinary audits of council accounts, leading to surcharges on individual councillors. Where the surcharge exceeds £500, councillors are automatically disqualified from holding Individual ratepayers, too, can complain. They can seek injunctions from the courts to prevent authorities flouting the law. Councillors disobeying a court injunction could face jail sentences.

Increased exports are vital to this expanding company. New production methods have been introduced. Lines have been rationalised from several thousands to 500. The result is a massive growth in output - which can only be absorbed by selling more overseas.

Yet competition is tough in the company's main markets - U.S.A., the Caribbean, Europe, South Africa and Australia. To achieve its ambitious sales targets the company employs sophisticated marketing techniques and skilled export insurance service.

Security, bank guarantees

In the old days before we had ECGD we missed a lot of business', says Mr R. V. Now he has ECGD insurance against 90-95% of losses where a buyer fails to pay or cannot transmit sterling. The policy enables the company to seek new business more adventurously, and also to make good use of the ECGD Comprehensive bank guarantee to finance dealer stocking on up to 6 months credit. water' clue in autobahn air crash which is used to boost the power of the Spey engines on take-off.

EXPERTS AT THE West German Air EXPERTS AT THE West German Air Accident Investigation Centre at Brunswick yesterday began a minute examination of the two Rolls-Royce Spey engines from the PanInternational BAC One-Eleven that crashed on the Hamburg-Kiel autobahn on Monday evening. The focus of their attention is the water injection system which is used to boost the power of the Spey engines on take-off.

Preiminary investigation of the crash—in which 99 passengers and five crew bad a near-miraculous escape (see reconstruction above)— has already whittled down the suspec-ted causes to two: either failure of the water injection system's pumping mechanism, or contamination of the water itself.

In the meantime, the German authorities are politely declining suggestions that the engines should be flown back to Britain for examination by the makers and on Friday they decided instead to send them by army transporters to their own research centre at Brunswick.

The auspicions about the water

The auspicions about the water injection system arose from an intensive second-by-second reconstruction of the circumstances of the crash.

The aircraft D-ALAR was on its fifth flight of the day, commanded by 31-year-old Captain Reinhold Huels with 121 on board hound for Malaga. Two minutes out of Fuhlshuettel Airport the starboard then the portengine lost power within seconds of since September 1.

By Antony Terry, Hamburg, and John Fielding, London each other. At this point the One-Eleven was in a full throttle climb at just over 1,000 feet.

Captain Huels immediately put out a "Mayday" call and was given the following instructions from the confollowing instructions from the control tower: "Fly West direction runway one. Land on south-west course, direction 0/5." But ha did not have enough power to complete this manoeuvre. Instead he chose the Hamburg-Kiel autobahn, which is only partially completed and fortunately carried only light traffic.

As he approached, Capt Huels saw the bridge across the autobahn. "I mtended to try to land on the far side of the bridge," he said later, "hut the power was not sufficient." He had previously lowered the undercarriage, he said, "because both engines were showing loss of power."

showing loss of power."

The unusual feature of all this—apart from the low loss of life when the plane hit the ground—was the almost simultaneous power failure in both engines.

The Spey engine is generally very reliable. It was first run in 1961 and has since become one of Rolls-Royce's biggest moneyspinners.

In 1969, BEA worked out that the chance of having to shut down a Spey in flight because of any kind of failure were one in every 14,000 flying hours —and even this most frequently through bird ingestion. The chances, therefore, against two Spey engines failing simultaneously from unrelated causes are astronomical.

Apart from the fuel supply, the two engines on a BAC One-Eleven bave very few systems in common bave very few systems in commonthey operate as almost completely separate units. But the water injection system is an exception: it is designed so that the same pumpand the same water supply feed both engines. It is this fact that has led to the German suspicions.

Water injection is in fact a relatively new development in jet engines. The point of it is to increase power tively new development in jet engines. The point of it is to increase power at certain critical times, for example when taking off with a full load of passengers and fuel. It is particularly useful in hot weather when the density of air entering the jet intakes is less. (Captain Huels was facing all these conditions last Monday evening)

It works by the simple device of injecting water into the engine's airstream before the fuel mixture is airstream before the fuel mixture is added. The water keeps the air density up and temperature down. More fuel can therefore be mixed with the air and consequently more power produced. The water is stored in an 100 gallon tank in the One-Eleven's tail fin, and if the device is not used on take-off the water is normally jettisoned to prevent it freezing at height.

But despite the apparent simplicity of the system, there are critical aspects in its design. The training director in charge of PanInternational's One-Eleven fleet, Dr Stoeckl, said last week: "The Spey system needs fine adjustment and has to be constilled maintained. If this is not carefully maintained. If this is not done there is trouble."

There is at least one similar case There is at least one similar case on record of water injection failure. A BEA pllot told us last week that earlier this year he was travelling along the runway at Naples at 100 knots prior to take-off in a Trident when he lost the water injection simultaneously in all three Speyengines and suffered a loss of power Fortunately he was still on the ground and was able to pull up.

If the German investigators find signs of malfunctioning of the pump which fed the water into the two engines, they will have a credible explanation of the crash. But they are also exploring the hypothesis that a servicing crew may have filled the water storage tank with contaminated water (de-mineralised water should be used).

There have been suggestions that the tank may have been accidentally filled with water-methanol, a mixture that is used in turboprop engines such as the Rolls-Royce Dart. But mixture is highly volatile and w almost certainly have blown up Speys before the aircraft started Several West German newspa yesterday carried reports that Dusseldorf (one of the ain D-ALAR called at earlier in its day before landing at Hamb day before landing at Hamb empty oil drums bad been used storing distilled water, and quot Rolls-Royce spokesman that there a "distinct possibility" that tamination could be the explana Even so, it would be necessar explain how any contamination or remain after the water tanks appeared times been emptied any several times been emptied and filled at the plane's other port call (it had also landed that at Frankfurt, Malaga and Han before reaching Hamburg).

When frightened, il rolls up into an impenetrably bristly hall quite safe from dogs and Sadly, however, this very defence mechanism may be leading to a decline in the population. Hedgehogs also curl up at night when light is shone on at fight when light is shone on them; they thus become perfect victims for the motor-car. Cap-tain Drew-Smythe says that most mornings this summer he has found up to eight dead hedge-hogs on the road in the three miles just outside his front gate in Herefordshire.

Captain Drew-Smythe has a way with hedgehogs and even the most timid seem willing to uncurl in his hauds. He employs three methods of catching them.
"Number one," he says, "I bribe small hoys. Number two is a quiet walk round the hedgerows at dusk. You hear them grunting and squealing as they forage. When you shine a torch on them, they curl and you grah." His third method is to drive slowly along at night and pick up the prickly balls he sees instead of running them over.

Any hedgehog taken too young to go to Harrods is turned loose to mature in Captain Drew-Smythe's large walled garden. For prospective owners, Cap-tain Drew-Smythe warns of only one real hazard. Being too prickly to be able to scratch well, hedgehogs play host to huge numbers of fleas and need frequent dusting down. Now with hibernation coming on, Captain Drew-Smythe will have to fall back on the sale of Welsh ponies Great Danes, miniature dachs-hunds and Siamese cats, to name but a few of the varieties of beats he breeds.

And next year? By then the Captain and his animal retinue will have removed to Carmarthenshire which is terro incognita for hedgehog hunting.

Hazard of a surgeon's gloves

A HIDDEN hazard on surgeons' gloves may explain the vague abdominal pains so common a week or so after a surgical operation, writes a Medical Correspon-

A report by two doctors in this week's British Medical Journal shows that the starch powder used to help the ruhber gloves slide easily on to the surgeon's hands can cause irritation of the patient's internal organs. In most people this irritation pro-duces only temporary discomfort. But in others the pain may hecome severe and lead to a new type of illness between two and six weeks after the operation.

When this happens the andomen hecomes swollen and the patient runs a fever and suffers nausea. Another operation is needed, and the surgeon finds that the intestines are stuck to one another, causing an obstruction to the food flow. The lining of the abdominal cavity may contain white nodules, arousing suspicion that the patient has tuberculosis or even inoperable cancer. Only careful examination of these tissues under the microscope shows the truth that the changes are due to in-flammation around a granule of

Why some patients react ex-cessively to starch and others do not is still not known, although complicating factors such as in-fection may play an important part. The two doctors, Mr Julian Neely and Dr. Douglas Davies, describe five patients with this condition, and as they were seen over a few months in two centres the doctors believe that the condition is more common than is realised.

Shops fit for kings fight the red peril

THE Piccadilly "carriage trade," which still pours wealth into such internationally-renowned establishments as Fortnum and Mason, Simpson of Piccadilly, Jacksons of Piccadilly, as well as attracting new customs. and Hatchards, could be badly bit as well as attracting new customif the Greater Londoo Council approves a bus lane running westward along Piccadilly, against the existing one-way traffic flow.

Among the disadvantages frankly listed in the GLCs questionnaire were a substantial reduction in the time traffic lights "Very few of our regular cus-tomers come by bus and, with respect, very few would come from the east side of London." allow pedestrians to cross, addi-tional congestion for ordinary traffic, and loading and unload-ing difficulties. Mr A. E. Burton, Simpson's company secretary, suggests tactfully. Like the other "vcry substantial ratepayers" now taking legal advice to block the plan, he foresees trade falling But more subtle factors are in-volved. Piccadilly is a thoroughfare whose shops are renowned for their "exclusiveness." "At home and abroad we are regarded as historical landmarks in the West End," says Mr Haydon Webb, general manager of Fort-num and Mason, "More than steeply if chauffeur-driven cars and taxls can no longer deposit customers at the entrance and retrieve them again when they have finished their shopping. balf our customers are 'carriage trade,' who expect to be put down and collected from the kerb. Apart from this inevitable The issue is the first major test-case of official sanction for public transport over private transport. GLC officials are analysing reactions from a crowded public meeting at St James's Church, Piccadilly, in July and from a widely circulated questionnairs, setting out the loss of custom, the whole tone of Piccadilly would be let down by an endless stream of buses. "There was the hippy who threatened to shove me through a plate-glass window when I stopped him going in," says Mr Gallagher. "He had bare feet, and Fortnum'a draw the line at bare feet."

But that democracy can be seen to be done even in Fortnum's "carriage trade" was instanced one Christmas, when King Hussein and his family finished their shopping and wanted a taxi to take them to their botel.

Super-louse takes over a million scalps

By Wendy Hughes

"SUPER-LOUSE," resistant to A SUPER-LOUSE, resistant to-DDT and other common insecti-cides has invaded the scalps of British children. Two reports reveal that more than one million people in England and Wales are infested by head lice, and that the new strain is largely responsible for the dramatic increase. At least half the victims are schoolchildren, and many of the rest are of pre-school age.

The latest reports, compiled by Mr John Maunder and Mr K. G. Coates, challenge lice infestation figures currently beld by the Department of Education, who assess the infestation at an optimistic 200,000 schoolchildren. Mr Maunder and Mr Coates claim that the lice bave spread because of "super-louse's resistance to insecticide treatment on one third of all carriers.

A survey of Teesside schoolrest are of pre-school age

A survey of Teesside school-children, conducted by Mr Coates, a research officer in the County Health Department, shows that seven per cent bad lousy scalps.

The louse is a bloodsucker living in and laying its eggs on bair. Punctures in the scalp caused by its feeding—usually five times a day—cause irritation and if the skin is broken by rerepeated scratching, secondary infections such as impetigo can follow.

Mr Maunder, lecturer at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, bas been experimenting with these lice for several years "The problem," be said yesterday, "is that people do not like to admit to baving lice and local authorities do not lice, and local authorities do not want to admit it either, so it is like an innocent conspiracy to keep the thing quiet.

"Some local authorities bave given up regular bead inspections altogether, and others do not inspect grammar schools, so that the recorded figures of infesta-tion are only about one-balf of the actual cases."

The Inner London Education Authority was alerted to the rise of super-louse in 1969 when figures from local boroughs showed that in two years the number of infested children bad number of infested children bad risen by 50 percent.

A spokesman for ILEA said yesterday that they have increased inspections of children's bair in the areas where the rise is most marked. "We have concentrated particularly on bad areas, but are unable to raise the number of inspections throughout the whole area without a large increase in the size out a large increase in the size of our bealth staff. We bave been battling against the super-nit since 1969."

The Department of Education said yesterday that up to date figures would not be ready uotil the end of this year but agreed that 1967 to 1969 had shown an increase in infestation.

In a bid to crush the new enemy, researchers in London have produced a new hair lotion, Malathion, which destroys both lice and eggs and has a residual action for some months. In the action for some months. In the current issue of Community Medicine Mr Maunder and Mr Coates report that this new preparation, available without prescription from chemists, has been used successfully in treating 3,000 London and Teesside school cblidren. No side effects were found and the lotion has been approved by the Government watchdog committee on drug safety.

"We have the technical abilities needed to virtually exter-minate the louse," says Mr Maunder. "What is needed now is a nationwide effort to get rid of this parasite.'

It would not have been so bad if there had been any evidence of a viable alternative industrial relations policy, or if one had not been so accutely aware of the bad faith of most of the union leaders who fulminated from the rostrum. All the union officials I spoke to last week were making plans to meet the Act in private.

Yet speaker after speaker insisted on demonstrating his militant credentials. It was a sad case of keeping up with the Jack Joneses. They all pluned their bones on keeping the new laws at bay until the next Labour Government came along to repeal them. But the reality is likely to be exactly the opposite. They will succeed in postponing regis-tration only for a few months; meantime they will leave them-selves without the protection from suits and actions that the new laws provide; more internal strains and bitterness will be generated among unions than for a geoeration; and their actions will make the re-election of a Labour Government less likely

Many shipping experts believe that the conversion of tankers into passenger ships—like the Heleauna—unvolve special risks.
The criteria governing the stability of a ship with a self-balancing liquid cargo are vastly different from the criteria for a massivity of the criteria for a massivity of the criteria for a massivity and the criteria for a massivity and the criteria for a massivity of the criteria for a massivity of the criteria for a massivity of the criteria for a criteria fo nassenger and car ferry. The plating in a passenger ship should also be stronger than in a tanker and the conversions can create extra fire risks.

ONCE the oudding shipping magnate has converted bis old hout, be has to operate it as cheaply as possible, and that means finding cheap labour. It is no longer so casy, even in Greece, where many people bead for places like the Volkswagen factories in Germany where the inw wages are still more attractive than anything they can earn at home. So while the Greek fleet has expanded rapidly, fewer Greeks want to work on the ships and the companies have had to turn to Arab countries.

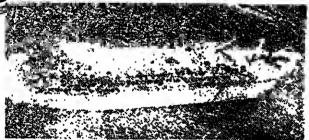

The Greek shipping magazine, Naftica Cbronika, commenting a few days ago on the increasing number of accidents to Greek sbips, said: "Most of them are eaused by negligence and inexperience. In most cases, the culprits are greenborn seamen and totally inexperienced coloured crews.

The new ship-owner often finds the competition tough when he finally gets into business—and the frightening things which can happen then are amply illustrated by an incident five weeks ago, on Sunday, August 8.

Apollon, was making the journey to the slightly newer and faster ferry, Apollon, was making the journey to the state of the second t at the same time, so the Naias left early to try to heat her.

Apollon gradually caught up but as she hegan to pass the Naias the older boat swerved in front. Passengers on the Apollon said it was only the captain's quick avoiding action which pre-vented a collision at speed. Some passengers later lodged an official complaint with the barbour-master at Piraeus.

Mr Richard Stubbs, a Briton who organises the world's largest shipping exhibition in Greece, and who is currently there with bis wife, vividly remembers travelling back from Hydra to Piraeus on the small, 352-ton Mario, with a Greck diplomat who later hecame one of the country's senior ambassadors. The two of them were so alarmed as hundreds of people poured on that they were convinced the boat would capsize if the wind got up. When they arrived, trembling, in they arrived, trembling, in Piraeus, they decided to count the number of passengers as they disembarked. They counted about 2,000 people. The Mario was certified to carry 450.

IT IS HARD to believe that such overcrowding can occur while there are such strict international rules on safety. The SOLAS rules drawn up at the International Conference on Safety of Life at Sea, in London in 1960, replaced the first international regulations agreed 12 years previously .

As for life-saving equipment, the hasic requirement is enough lifebrals for everyone on hoard. But then you come to the loopholes. Powell blames it on Heath MR ENOCH POWELL was in Ulster laat night, launching the strongest attack yet made by a British politician on Mr Heath's policy in Northern Ireland. He criticised the Prime Minister's talks with Mr Lynch as "a grave error of judgment," and said that talking with the Prime Minister of a country which wished to "annex" Ulster could be interpreted as a sign that the British were preparing to "get out."

The impression I have mentioned is exactly that which the enemy exerts himself by every possible means to create.

It ought to be the object of Her Majeaty's Government to converted the converted to the convert Mr Powell, who was speaking at a Unionist rally in Omagh, begao hy saying that it was "remarkable that there should vey, by deed as well as word, the identification of Northern Ireland with the rest of the United Kingdom... appear to be anything remarkable able about a Conservative MP from Staffordshire addressing bis political colleages in County Tyrone. Not only did too few MPs visit Northern Ireland, but in recent months members of The Government and people of the Irish Republic desire and intend to detach these six counties from the United Kingdom and amalgamate them with the Republic.

They bave made no secret of this. Indeed, it is the sort of intention of which it is not pos-intention of which it is not possible to make a secret. Naturally they do not propose to do so by overt force themselves; but if the route to their objective is opened by whatever means, they will, equally naturally, welcome and exploit that route.

If a campaign of murder, violence and terror were to paralyse law and order in Northern Ireland, there would be no need for the government of the Republic to accept responsibility for it; but they would be duty bound to take every means to turn that opportunity to good account to bring nearer annexation of the Six In fact they know that, were they to fail in this prime duty of any government of the Republic, they would speedily be super-seded by another government which would not fail.

All this being so, it is an exhibition of almost stupefying innocence for Her Majesty's Government to expect the assist-ance of the Irish Republic in ending terrorism and disorder in Ulster. But innocence, though it may be neutral or even admirable in individuals, is a dangerous quality in governments. However poker-faced was the official out-come of the talks this week between Mr Heath and Mr Lynch, the fact that they took place at all was a grave error of judg-

When the British Government is seen taking counsel about peace and security in a part of the United Kingdom with the Prime Minister of the very country which is dedicated to the annexation of that part and cannot fail to approve the objects and conto approve the objects and con-sequences of the disorder, what must people think? I will tell you. They think: "Obo, so the British are wobbling and prepar-ing to get out; else why would they be parleying with the resl-dual beneficiary of their embar-rassments?" That may be mistaken. I trust it is. But can you blame anyone, friend or foe, who draws that conclusion.

Enter the THES. On Friday 15 October The Times Higher Education Supplement starts

life, to report news and developments in higher education: in arts and sciences; technology; in teaching and research; and in administration and policy. Week by week the paper will also provide features and book reviews by the leading names in their field of work. Controversy will stalk the opinion columns, and the letters page promises pungent reading. In the 1960s higher education was our fastest growing major national enterprise apart from electronics and natural gas; in the seventies expansion is likely to be at least as great. By 1980 some 100,000 academic staff (and upwards of a million students) will be involved in Britain alone. On them will be spent an annual budget probably approaching £1,000 million, or one per cent of the gross national product.

Others who will read and communicate increasingly through the Higher Education Supplement are the people in those areas most closely related to higher education within government, industry, commerce, the professions and the schools.

Early this summer, after those 12 years of suspense, Mrs Mead was told she must go. The Council, with its superb sense of timing, chose December 24 as Mcanwhile Mead's the Grocers was becoming an unofficial Greenwich social centre. Mrs Alcad was made chairman of the Greenwich Society. The new London middle-class invasion of the district meant that many of the foreclosure date. She also learned that by staying put she had ceased to qualify for the same compensation paid to the other shopkeepers. The reasons for this are complex, and in some ways contested.

But basically, the Council chose to evict Mrs Mead in an unexpected fashion. All her neighbours who ohediently left their shops to rot long ago were paid under the original Compulsory Purchase Order which oppurer researches.

Order, which ensures reasonable minimum compensation. Mr. Mead was evicted as a tenant of the Council under the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954—and the maximum she can get under this Act is about £300. During those 12 years the Council had of every acquired the cil had, of course, acquired the freehold on the site and Mrs Mead's lease had expired.

One local councillor.

Judith Rees, has taken up this apparent unfairness with the Town Hall officials, but has been told that Mrs Mead has forfeited all her rights—whether or not she deserved to.

Mrs Mcad's friends are proposing to taken an even stronger position. Actress Jill Balcon, the Poet Laureate's wife, intends to help organise a large Greenwich protest movement.

"We think this is a ludicrous injustice," she says. "Why dis-criminate against a woman for keeping open a marvellous shop in a street otherwise derelict? With her talent for helping people, Wendy Mead saved the ratepayers hundreds of pounds in social services.

"If the Council do not find some way of giving her a fair compensation, as she was promised, we will mount petitions, we will lobby the Town Hall, we'll march on the House of Commons if necessary."

"I'm not asking for any charity," says Wendy Mead. "All I ask is to be treated fairly. If, for some complicated legal reason. I risked losing my compensation by staying on, why didn't some one pop over from the Town Hall and warn me? After all, in their terms it's not much I'm asking

She is, in fact, asking for £3,850. If she doesn't get such a sum she will almost certainly go bankrupt, or be forced to sell ber house. As far as the Council is con-cerned, their spokesman Mr Brian Harris made Ihls state-ment: "Mrs Mead has since the expiry of ber lease been the tencan only—in law—be com-pensated under the terms of the Landlord and Tenant Act. We may agree that the amount we can pay is likely to be very small, but there seems to be no way we can pay more. Nonetheless, we are still trying to find some

Most of Mrs Mead's neighbours seem very eager for the Council to find such a loopbole no Greenwich resident could begrudge the small addi-tional charge to the rates. After all, the Council have been losing a similar sum in non-existent rents for the derelict houses in Royal Hill every two months for the past 12 years. Almost the only person who has been paying her rent and rates is Wendy Mead.

Other European users of Makrolon have similar success stories. One advertising concern has received many requests for their tram and bus stop shelters which incorporate Makrolon transparent panels. Scheduled tests to prove the suitability of Makrolon were decisive enough, including striking it with a hammer, but one unintentional test really proved the point. A lorry driver lost control and crashed into a bus shelter. Among the distorted steel frames lay a sheet of Makrolon quite intact and indeed, ready to be fitted into the next shelter.

First names like Matiwilda, Philomena or Pinkney, and surnames like Handbag, Overflow or Placenta (all genuine) have prompted two psychologists at the University of Sussex—Christopher and Louise Fyznes. topher Bagley and Louise Evan-Wong—to undertake a survey of their effects on the people who bear them. They were following up some evidence which suggested that children with unusual names often suffered from psychiatric disturbances although they bad no other apparent abnormality. gested that children with unusual arms often suffered from sychiatric disturbances although they bad no other apparent then consistently seen as the same as being mentally ill. Is there a possibility that some names—say those of the nineteen consistently seen as odd—have had serious consequences?

reasonable one. One study of American girls, for instance, bad showed that as many as one in four was dissatisfied with one or both of the names they had, and that for many of them this meant tbat for many of them this meant a consequent shyness and embarrassment. A study at Harvard involving more than 3,000 students showed that there was a significant link between the drop-out rate of certain people hefore exams and those whn had "idiosyncratic" names. And in Africa it has been found that with the Ashanti in Ghana children grow up with different personalities depending on the descriptive names they are given. Bagley and Evan-Wong took Bagley and Evan-Wong took Bagley and Evan-wong took the names of eighty or so psychiatrically disordered children and paired each one with a name taken at random from another group of children with nervous disorders. They then asked more than forty colleagues—doctors, nurses, other psychologists, and teachers—to look at this list and to say which name in each pair (if any) showed peculiarities.

Fidget, Pansey) helonged to the psychiatrically disordered group.

To confirm that children, too, saw these names as odd the psychologists gave the same list of eighty-three pairs to a group of eleven-year-olds. To make the experiment more real they presented the question in a gamelike way, asking a child to imagine that he had wou a prize—a visit to a boliday camp, where swimming and fun fairs and discotheques were all free; and then to say which child in each pair he would like to take with him. Overwhelmingly, the children with "ordinary" names were preferred.

were preferred. Ordinary names then, uences?

In another part of the experiment a different group of children was given 19 pairs of names: one out of each pair was taken from the list of particularly odd names, the other was a more common one. The children were told that one in each pair was always naughty always in trouble never one in each pair was always naughty, always in trouble, never did what the teacher wanted and was, in consequence, a thoroughly undesirable type. Would they guess which child of the two it was? On average the children opted for the "odd" name 16 times out of 19.

It appeared, therefore, that are unusual name could also affect the early popularity of a child at school and with friends. More important, it might conceivably have affected these children's attitudes towards themselves their self-image as psychologists call it.

To test this, Bagley and Evan Wong compared the clinical his

Are you, in fact, as informed as you should be of all the advantages and disadvantages of Britain's entry into the EEC?

The final decision will soon be made. It will come after intensive debate in both Houses of Parliament and long discussions among private individuals.

It will come after unequalled reporting and comment in The Times, established already as the newspaper with the fullest coverage of European affairs.

The issue is immense and, in deciding your attitude, The Times will be indispensable.

was seized.

Siviero maintains that this one is by no means an isolated case-study. Organisation inside Italy is fairly simple—the thieves selling the picture to a receiver for a fee who sells it to another receiver abroad (with transport carried out by another inganisation, again for a flat fee). The pictures take one of three directions. Thy pass through fake auctions. Thy pass through fake auctions and then are discreetly sold (if not too well known). Or they end up in art investment funds as they are euphemistically called —run by private banks which bas expired.

The third and most difficult channel through which stoleo pictures pass is that of the major antique dealers and important collectors, it is difficult because those concerned are more exposed to risk.

But even some prestigious museums are prepared to take the risk. Io 1969 the Boston Museum acquired a Raphael Portrait of a Young Girl, worth £600,000, which had been smuggled out of Italy by one of the Museum's own staff. Yesterday the Museum finally agreed to return the picture after strong pressure from the Italian authorities, and a detailed account of ties, and a detailed account of its theft which appeared in these

FOUND: Rubens' St Gregory the poet. 'Liberated by allied troops with 306 other masterpleces from the Gotha Stadtmuseum, it was identified yesterday as hanging in the Albright Art Gallery, Buffalo, NY, of a Rubens painting of St Gregory Nazianzenus.

At the time the gallery announced that the picture had been acquired from a New York dealer, E. & A. Silbermann in 1953. Mr Mackingtosh Buck, assistant director of the Albright Gallery confirmed that the picture Gallery confirmed that the picture came from Gotha—it has the museum stamp on the back—but he was under the impression that the town had sold the collection years ago. He expressed surprise on hearing that his Rubens was on the German Government's wanted list....

But International co-operation in the recovery of works of art is almost as inadequate as the preventive action taken to stop the pictures disappearing in the first place. In Italy which has the greatest store of artistic wealth in the world the scene is a fairly

The reasons range from the slownesa of the bureaucracy to The painting, however, was the indifference of the politicans stolen from the Stadtmuseum of and Italian public opinion, to Gotha after the war when the poverty of many churches. American troops occupied the It is almost impossible to guard town.

At the time the gallery churches in the 280 Italian dioceses which are now the main target of the thieves.

This year's budget allocates £2 million for buying pictures, main-tenance, salaries for those not directly paid by the ministry, £1 million for restoring, for anti-theft devices, and for protecting art works belonging to the State: £1.2 million for restoring and looking after art works belonging to the church and other non-State bodies, and £160,000 for subsidies to other agencies of various descriptions.

Some palliatives have been adopted recently though. Since 1970 an extra £250,000 a year bas been allocated for antitheft devices but as a modern de-vice costs up to £40,000, this means that the vast majority of churches, in particular, are un-

For the time being it seems that the protection of the country's artistic heritage is bound to remain a secondary consideration in Italy. As one official rather bitterly put itl There's no votes to be lost or gained with stolen pictures, so it remains low on the politicians list of priorities."

But the problem is by no means one of just preventative action and the allocation of men and money to do this. In the undergrowth of Italian officialdom there are a number of competing organisations all involved with the recovery of art works and in two cases with the arrest of the thieves and receivers. The oldest and best established in terms of experience and know-bow in the shadowy world of dubious dealera delegation for the recovery of works of art, set up by the Anglo-American governments at the end of the war with the aim of getting back thousands of works of art stolen and bought Siviero has managed to get back some 3,000 art works from

Then with the rise in thefts he found his hudget increased. be found his budget increased tenfold hut most of his assistant tenfold hut most of his assistants takeo away.

The reason is not difficult to find. Both the police force and para-military carabinieri got in on the act in the late 1960s. But instead of merging forces with Siviero's organisation, the police and the carabinieri have all gone than a constant. their own way. Both the police forces operate internationally through Interpol, but one of their troubles is that the countries where most of the stolen paint where most of the stolen paintings end up—Switzerland, Germany, USA, Canada and South America—do not have similar aquads of policemen dressed up as art experts (or vice-versa). Although the intention is certainly gnod it does seem that the special talents of Siviero and his organisation could blend well with those of the police.

A number of dealers in Rome are sentical about the Involve.

are sceptical about the involve ment or existence of art gangs. One of them, Marcello Sestieri, a leading international Rome dealer, made a clear distinction dealer, made a clear distinction between pictures bought legally and exported illegally, and stolen pictures. The Boston Museum smuggler, he said, belonged only to the former category. No one had proved to his satisfaction that there existed gangs or private collectors ready to get involved in the latter. involved in the latter.

But one Italian female senator, Tullia Romagnoli Carretoni, in a speech to the Senate on June 18 1971 cited the names of three men domiciled in Switzerland stating that all three had been involved in illicit art dealings. She called for their expulsion from Italy. Today all of them are free to come and go in Italy. and one maintains an office in Rome. No one doubts that if the Titian, and the Bellinis have been passed on to the international art underworld that it will be very difficult to place them unless the theft was done on commis-sion. It does seem that for some years to come the steady drain of Italy's patrimony will continue. There is a long way to go before the necessary organisation, both for preventive action and re-covery, is set up.

One bopes that there will be something left to protect by the time the bureaucratic tangles. the public and official indifference and lethargy, the lack of money and staff bave all been sorted out.

CHILDREN Sweet propaganda

LAST WEEK in Spectrum the Dougal bad found a lump of steady march of tooth decay was sugar inside the shop. 'This is the LAST WEEK in Spectrum the steady march of tooth decay was charted. If there was one point oo which all dental authorities agreed it was that aweets are a major cause of decay in children's teeth, and that if children could be persuaded not to eat them then the incidence of decay could be dramatically reduced.

Yct the dental profession's cam-paign to convince children—and pareots—of the dangers of sweets is being undermined by pro-sweets propaganda which is not only directed at children during their most receptive years but is uf such a persuasive nature that one would be forgiven for thinking that sweets manufacturers themselves were behind it. Comics are the worst offenders but it will come aa a considerable shock to many parents who do their best to contain their children's sweets consumption that school text books contain strong pro-sweets material.

The Ladybird Key Words reading scheme is widely used in schools throughout the country. The text has been prepared by Mr W. Murray an experienced headmaster. Yet in book 3B, "Boys and Girls", children may read the following references to sweets: p. 42: "Jane is with Peter. Jane says, Here is a sweet than Please set some sweets. shop. Please get some sweets Peter. Go into this ahop for some sweets. Yes, we want some sweets says Peter." p. 16: "Peter and Jane are in the car with Daddy ... They see a toy shop and a sweet shop." In book 3C, "Let Me Write." the very first sentence a child is required to write

Give mc some sweets." IPC Magazines publish "Play-hour and Robin" which they des-cribe as "a storytime weekly." The cover story each week is "The Magic Roundabout" based on the BBC children's television series. The issue of April 10 thia year reads: "The Magic Roundabout children wanted some lo last week's issue sweets so Zebedee took them to the 'Sweet Shop.' See! It is made of all different kinds of sweets! 'Help yourselves,' said Zebedee, springing up and taking a liquorice chimney pot. There are all sorts of sweets for everyone l' 'The roof does taste nice,' said Rosalie, Paul and Basil. 'So in the "Give me" section is sweetest sweet shop I've ever seen, be said."

"Teddy Bear" is another IPC "Teddy Bear" is anouser fre-children's magazine. The issue of August 21 this year (as well as a reference to the prize in a teddy bear race being a big box of chocolates) carries an advertise-ment for Bassett's Dolly Mixture. ment for Bassett's Dolly Mixture. The advertisement is disguised as a comic strip called "Penny Doll" and ends with Penny Doll saying to Peter Bear: "Thank saying to Peter Bear: "Thank you, Peter. You can have this box of lovely Dolly Mixture for being so helpful."

Is there anything parents and dentists can do against this in-sidious form of sweets persua-aion? "I wish I knew." says Dr John Yudkin, Professor of Nutrition at Queen Elizabeth College, London, "I lie awake at night worrying about it because I believe that sugar causes not only caries (decay) but also coronary thrombosis, I'm begin-ning to think that—Big Brother or not—the problem can only be solved by legislation. Just as the law recognises that cocaine is bad for you then the law is should have something to say the

In the meantime, Professor D. C. A. Picton, professor of Preventive and Experimental Den tistry at University College Hos-pital, London, offers this advice: Try to impose a complete ban on sweets for children under four. For those over four restrict the eating of sweets to a par-ticular time of day, preferably tca-time. Or even better, restrict it to one lea-time a week, say Saturday. Then allow the child to eat as many sweets as he can in that limited time. There is clear evidence that this ration ing system causes a marked reduction in children's caries."

Phillip Knightley

Io last week's issue we quoted Professor Gerald Winler of the Eastman Dental Institute as saying that there was no connection between tooth-brushing and dental decay in the front teeth. In fact Professor Winter's findings show that in very young children there is no relation between tooth-brushing and decay, with the exception one!' 'The roof does taste pice,' ing and decay, with the exception said Rosalie, Paul and Basil. 'So of the front leeth where beneficial to these mints!' smiled Florence. results have been recorded.

He would not say this if he ever attended any of our rallies

Libyan people have never stayed away from their Arab countries closely as well and supported Guinca against imperialist invasion. And now the Libyan people stands with Malta

I believe Mr Holden must have read about these events. But it seems that he has drawn his information from sources which do not wish well for the Arab nation or the Lihyan people.

We ask Mr Holden not tu over-take history. The Libyan revolu-

Surely all this fuddy-duddyness can't really represent the solid centre of English commonsense "? Why don't they share Mr Young's hroadminded tolerance or is it indifference, or even, God forbid, connivance"

Nor are they silent, these fighters in what Mr Young considers "lost causes," the battles against porn and violence. They natter ceaselessly to each other, and to anyone else who will listen -such as their MP.

Perhaps the adjective was coined because their voices never, or seem never, to reach those in authority who, they persist in helieving in the face of all the evidence, could actually do something to win these causes if they cared a little more. For there is cared a little mon-silence at the top. Gilbert Longden

Who we are

LET ME enlighten Hugo Young a little on what he calls so sneer ingly the "silent majority."
We are housewives trying in hring up our families decently and cope with rising living costs. We are trade unionists who see our elected representatives being howled down by vocal militants. We are nurses working physically hard for the henefit of sick humanity.

We are teachers doctors farmers and farmworkers. We are the vast majority of students working for degrees and conscious of the fact that we are sup-ported by public taxes—in fact we are the great majority of youngsters. We are the old people harassed and worried hy the speed of life and the "trendy" doings of Mr Young's "vocal minority."

We are in fact a very large cross-section of the community—the people who still put in an honest day's work, and are too tired at the end of it to sit down and write to their Members of Parliament, or to address public meetings. Why does not Hugo Young say outright that he favours soft treatment for hardened criminals, pornography, sexual pemaissive-ness, agnosticism and all the other things he is so articulate

Does he not realise that bis despised "silent majority" voted the present Government luto office in the hope that they might bring this country back to l am proud to sign myself a "member of the silent majority" and a middle-aged housewife.

Slim minority

MR HUGO YOUNG writes a philippic of sustained emotion against the "silent majority" hut can find no one to quote except the Bishop of Lancaster and Senator Goldwater. Not even Vice-President Agnew—surely the originator of the phrase—is mentioned. I bave never come across tioned. I bave never come across a dossier of supposed dissenters so ill-documented.

But of course the author is by happy chance, if not by proof, quite right. There is no silent majority. What does however exist, is a vocal minority: and Mr Young, with Freudian lapses everywhere apparent in his rhetoric, is very obviously of that slender company.

The hills of Halifax

I THINK most people who live in Halifax will resent Philip Norman's description of the town's "encircling filth-sprayed hills" (Colour Magazine, last week). Anyone who has visited this town will know that the hills which surround it are open moor-land with, at this time of year, a covering of purple heather. Few towns are lucky enough to be girdled by a countryside which has changed little in the last 200 years. Incidentally, Halifax was one of the first industrial towns to adopt a smokeless zone policy.

As to euthanasia; if the time conies when I am convinced that my life is insufferable I am quite capable of applying my own solution, without advice from any pundit, nu matter how learned.

One of the most irritating characteristics of the cuthanasia-for-other-people faction is its assumption that youth, per se, is more important than age; that where the interests or welfare of youth and age conflict the former must, as of right, have preference, no matter what the past value to the com-

the impression that knowledge of dental disease is scanty and that preventive dentistry has "failed." This is far from the truth. Much remains to he understood and some "hreakthrough" is hoped for. Nevertheless, there is a considerable body of scientific knowledge upon which numerous effective preventive methods are now based.

You probably know something about St. Austell – a quiet little market town deep in the South-West. And that's about right.

But our marketplace covers some 40,000,000 square miles and we trade in more than 20 different languages, not counting Cornish.

St. Austell, of course, houses the headquarters of English China Clays: we produce and refine millions of tons of the world's finest china clays. They end up in everything from space-shots to Sunday supplements.

We send 2,000,000 tons of Clay abroad every year. Over £30,000,000 comes back every year, all in foreign currencies. Beat that for a quiet little marketplace.

Lesson in diplomacy

MR GEOFFREY JACKSON'S instant knighthood symbolises his countrymen's admiration for him. To endure solitary confinement for eight months, without knowing the term of ona's imprisonment. calls for very special spiritual as well as physical resources. The Ambassador's fortitude in captivity strengthens the arguments of those who, while admitting that each case of diplomatic kidnapping must be judged according to its particular context, in general counsel against yielding to political blackmail whatever the risks to the innocent victim.

Unfortunately such kidnappings have become, in certain troubled areas of the world, an occupational bazard of diplomacy. There is not a great deal, short of withdrawing their diplomatic missions altogether from those areas, that third countries can do to prevent such violent acts taking lace. Some simple precautions are obvious, such as the Ambassador and his staff avoiding the establishment of a regular routine in their movements about the capital and between their homes and offices. But total security, in face of desperate or fanatical elements, is unattainable. When the worst happens, there is equally not very much that the government of a kidnapped diplomat can do, other than to adopt the dubious course of trying to persuade the host government to pay the kidnapper's price. In Mr Jackson's case the British Government rightly forbore from such a course, what-ever the pressures upon it to "do something." The Uruguayan Government comes out of the affair ingloriously. The real hero is Mr Jackson himself, who has, by his courage and resolve, contributed notably to the maintenance of the rule of law and international

Unwinding in Ulster

THREE-SIDED talks between London, Dublin and Belfast will represent a concession by all three governments. In holding them London will acknowledge Dublin's legitimate interest in the future of the North: Dublin will overlook its objection to granting Stormont any semblance of parity: and Belfast will embark on a dialogue which, when it was attempted by Terence O'Neill, was the beginning of his downfall.

These concessions alone indicate that the talks are the best step forward Mr Heath could immediately have made. They should give relevance to the seemingly feeble initiative by Mr Maudling to hold talks with all sides in Ulster—a process in which the Home Sacretary should surely have been involved ever since he came to office. In denouncing them yesterday at Omagh, Mr Enoch Powell, more Orange than Orange and twice as articulate, once again brought bis powers of impolitic exaggeration to bear upon precisely the issue where they may have the most destructive effect.

The occasion will be tragically pointless if the three Prime Ministers cannot rise above the mouthing of intransigent positions. There is a danger of this in any situation where doctrine and history sink so deep as they do in Ireland. Mr Heath's role remains here, as it must always be if Ulster is to be pacified, much the most significant. Government circles in London indignantly reject suggestions that his conduct so far has been inflexible. They insist that the Prime Minister is not only aware of the need for political solutions. but recognises that Stormont, as at present con-stituted, is inadequate: the institutional framework needs to be rebuilt. Setting up the tripartite talks is the first public Indication that mere legalism does not, after all, dominate thinking in Downing Street.

Mr Faulkner's speech on Friday shows that he will put any reforming plans Mr Heath has to a formidable test. He attacked Mr Wilson's proposals for Westminster to take a more active part in Ulster affairs. Standing squarely on Stormont's independence, he indicated that only very minor changes will be acceptable. Yet Mr Wilson's programme cannot be ruled out simply because it appears to move closer to direct rule. The plan for a Parliamentary Commission, for annual review of the Special Powers Act, for activating the Council of Ireland and so forth would acknowledge what is fact: that it is only with the aid of Westminster's army that Stormont can survive. Without the army, and even perhaps with it, the status quo is not viable. That is the major contextual fact against which any reform proposals have to be considered.

Meanwhile it is unrealistic to expect the main Catholic groups in the North to take part in the Maudling round so long as internment lasts in its present rigorous form. It is now five weeks since the main roundup of detainees, and there is still no sign of the advisory committee which is meant to review the evidence against them. Along with violent men, many non-violent but anti-government figures are being held witbout trial. Mr Faulkner and his colleagues show no sign of recognising either the inhumanity or the political imprudence of this casual dilatoriness. For the sake of its own credibility, if nothing else, the British Government should require storment to speed up the return to a minimum Stormont to speed up the return to a minimum legality. No opportunity should be missed to prove that Orange and Westminster are not one.

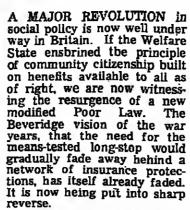

Room for Christians?

IT IS MORE THAN merely ironic that the so-called Festival of Light should already have been threatened with extinction by the so-called Festival of Life. The inaugural meeting of the Festival of Light, a campaign begun to fight moral pollution and defend Christian values, was crudely interrupted by people claiming to speak for libertarian groups. Homosexuals and lesbians chanted four-letter words and sundry other childish efforts were made to shock and silence the assembled Christians. Altogether the affair was an instructive example of what can happen to free speech when interpreted by so-called "radicals," under the banner of the counter-culture.

The Festival of Life, as it now describes itself, claims to be the nucleus of an "anti-repression" movement. This improbable federation of Women's Lib, Gay Lib, Oz Lib and the rest is nevertheless in favour of Speech Lih on only the most selective hasis. In traditional style, an anti-repressive movement thus announces itself by seeking to repress a gathering of people the very first time these people show a capacity to organise themselves against cultural trends of which, quite legitimately, they disapprove.

of which, quite legitimately, they disapprove.

If a genuine repressive threat exists, it plainly springs from the paranoid fears of the people who have formed the Festival of so-called Life. Perhaps the sincere and unfashionable Christianity which underlies the Festival of Light will eventually manifest itself in authoritarian interferences with other people's liberties. So far there is no indication of that. British liberty is far from perfect but it is as good as you can find anywhere, as homosexuals, lesbians, writers and artists know. It is surely capable of embracing people who take a Christian view of

For the first time a government is demonstrating not a balf-hearted dalliance with means tests, hut a full-blooded determination to cast them as the centrepiece on the welfare stage. For this purpose two innovations of profound significance have heen made in this last year—the suhaidising of actual wages through the family income aupplement and the swilch to subsidising people, again on an individual means-tested hasia, rather than dwellings in the case of hoth council and private tenants.

The scale of these changes bas so far heen little recognised. A welfare system is being forged involving for the first time the means-testing of familiea, including aome 15 million persons. For the bousing subsidies White Paper makes it clear that about balf the 5½ million local authority tenants and 21 million private tenants in the country will he eligible for a rent allowance to offset roughly doubled rents. To this must be added at least a further half million persons involved in the family income supplement (FIS) means test.

These facts mean that roughly five times more working families, with the head in fulltime employment, will now be liable to means-testing than are at present receiving all other means-tested henefits put together. They mean that housing subsidies totalling perhaps £250 million will now be dispensed solely on the basis of individual claims that a family cannot meet the rent charged unaided. We are seeing the inauguration of a Means Test State on a massive acade.

But the Government's intentions regarding means-tested welfare are even clearer from their handling of benefits that are already subject to proof of need. A FIS "passport" bas been constructed of five benefit; such that, if a family is entitled to one, it is entitled to all. As a means of increasing take-up, this Idea bas had considerable success. In the sixteen-week period from 1st April this year the proportion of families entitled to free welfare milk and foods who actually receive them rose from 1 per cent to 41 per cent. The weekly average take-up of dental charge exemptions bas been increased more than four times, almost five times, and of prescription charge exemptions almost thirteen times.

A window in the Social Security office: for rent relief, family income supplement, prescription charge exemption, etc.

A MEANS TEST STATE?

No doubt the Government is delighted at these results, which at minimum cost purport to demonstrate its newfound concern for the poor. But cutting public expenditure on the social services whilst also selectively concentrating what is left on those in greater need as defined by means tests (the twin Conservative aims) cannot be secured without a price. Perhaps the price didn't matter much when means tests were a peripheral appendage of the main welfare system. It matters now.

The price is exacted on two main counts. One is financial, the other is psychological. Both are decisive objections. First, the problem of poverty surtax is now acknowledged by the Government as a valid and serious obstacle to any further extension of means-testing. Every extra benefit tied to the same low-income range and, tberefore, liable to he lost as income rises above this same low income threshold imposes a marginal "tax" level often rising to 90 per cent and sometimes well over 100 per cent. The family man on £18 a week is more barshly penalised toBY MICHAEL MEACHER

Government's pledge to restore

Secondly, and more subtly, the new policy suffers from a fatal ambivalence. Either we should all stand on our own two feet and there is stigma in heing means-tested, in having to admit poverty, which in our society is, deep down, an admission of failure; or benefits are rights, people are entitled to them, and public demand is generated by advertising campaigns as for soap and washing machines. Which is it? If the latter, where is the incentive to regain economic independence, or is standing on your own two feet a sham? If the former, how can the take-up best more than fragmentary? This basic philosophic inconsistency is unresolved, and the confusion of goals is already yielding some ironic results. The passionate desire of the low paid precisely to be inde-pendent, "to bold their beads high," even at appalling costs in physical strain and disrupted increased more than four times, day than the millionaire. Such family life, was demonstrated failures, of optical charge exemptions a result makes nonsense of the by the official report on poverty. Such entitled "Circumstances of Families," which found that the lowest-paid worked longest bours. Yet now lbe Government is intent, not only on driving vast number of families into unwanted dependence on public benefits, but actually imprisoning them there hecause of the reinforced disincentive effect of accumulated means-test benefits.

Indeed, the Government has leant over backwards to diminish stigma. We have even been treated to the extraordinary spectacle of Mrs Thatcher saying on television four months ago (Panorama, April 26) that discrimination against free school meals children should be avoided by the stratagem of pretending to extract coins from an envelope they brought and then banding back the identical coins as "change" after sup-posedly paying for the meals. But, after Mr Davies' bracing outburst against lame ducks living "in a soft, sodden morass of subsidised incompetence," doubtless such tricks carry less than conviction. Not surprisingly, therefore, FIS is stuck at a take-up rate of around a mere 15 per cent of those entitled to it, and the majority of other means-tesled benefits are almost as big pared with the Government's PATRICK pared with the Government's 100,900 elderly persons for the over-eighties pension. Within a few months they actually located 128.343 who were entitled—a take-up rate of 128 per cant in the case of a non-means-tested benefit. The moral is obvious.

But the destruction of incentives and ambiguity over stigma do not exhaust the drawbacks inherent in the new means-test drive. The chaos of a huge ramshackle system has hardly been dented. The fact that the Government had a limited success in making four or five means-tested henefits work cannot conceal the more important fact that there are thirty nine other types of such henefit still untouched, many of them scandalously ineffective. Educational maintenance allowances. for example are currently taken up by 4 per cent of those eligible. Altogther there are over 3.000 different means-test syslems in operation in Britain today, half of them unique, so that rationalisation can hardly be said to have even started.

Nor ia the new policy an ohvious success even on the avowed aim of economy, judging from the FIS experiment Benefit in the first year is likely to cost £1½ million. Yet official sources have indicated that the advertising campaigns, mainly for FIS, are costing £340,000 and the administration costs over £250,000. There are also at least 248 special investigators employed by the Ministry, an increase of 250 per cent over a decade ago, plus a further 30 attached to the Department of Employment, to investigate fraudulent claims, at a cost to the tax-payer of prohably some £700,000 a rear. Even for only a six-month period in the Manchester area alone in 1968-69, the cost in clerical wages in checking for fraudulent claims for free pre-scriptions came to £1,900 (though precisely £8 was recovered for the lax-payer). The costs for the whole country over a period of several years for the total range of benefits can be imagined. In the last analysis, bowever, the crucial issue is surely this: do we really want a society in which up to a third of the population are forced to subsist on means-tested aid? Will this not sharpen the myth, and crystallise the accompanying resentments, that society is divided between the givers and the takers, corresponding to the lazy and the provident, the deserving and the undeservlng? Are we not in danger of creating a new Poor Law socially in which the class lines are redrawn along the pseudoboundaries of economic depen dence versus independence?

MICHAEL MEACHER is Labour MP for Oldham (West) oud was formerly Lecturer in Sociol Administration, University of York.

A NEW and subtle threat to the scientist's already much compromised right to publish his results freely was brought into the open last week at the Britisb Association meeting in Swansea. The warning hy Dr Kenneth Mellanby, Director of the Nature Conservancy's Monkswood Station, that government departments were sometimes censoring scientific results simply because they were embarrassing, touched one of the scientific community's most sensitive nerves.

The free publication of results is one of the fundamental ethical principles of science, to which all scientists pay lip service. But it is hypocrisy for most scientists to claim that their hasic loyalty is to this principle. In Britain today probably less than one research scientist in four has that freedom that freedom.

Leaving aside teachers in schools and further education establishments, who do little research, about 60 per cent of all scientists are employed in industry, where they are re-stricted by commercial security Another 20 per cent or so are employed by the Govern-The amount they can publish varies enormously. So for a majority of research scientists the right to publish is very far from absolute. Their primary loyalties are not to some abstract idea of science hut to their employers. Within the existing social and international context the case for some military and commercial has heen a tendency for security is unanswerable. This toxin bad been responsible for a lot of deaths among turkeys, and experiments in the lahoratory in question had shown that it also produced liver cancer in rats. A lot of groundnut oil was used in making margarine. The implications were ohvious and far reaching and the article was withdrawn only a day or two before it was due to he published. Of course the intention was not to suppress the results completely. It was to avoid a panic while the facts were still uncertain. Luckily on this occasion there were no need for panic. The did not get Into toxin awkward. At the heginning of the year, for example, there was a scare ahout mercury in tinned tuna fish. Ministry scientists started to look into the question of mercury in fish, and within a week or two reassuring figurea were being quoted in ministerial statements. Yet the full report has still not heen published. There were delays too in releasing the information that the mass deaths of sea hirds In the Irish Sea a couple of years ago were prohably due to chemical called polycblorinated biphenyis.

It is no accident that all these cases concerned the environment. Pollution, along with such related issues as food vironment. additives and the side effects of drugs are now matters of lively public concern. Public the country on environmental pressure for some kind of matters. They are the ohvious action can build up fast, with awkward consequences for the

But they can also sound highly alarming to the layman, so sland what alarming in fact that public geraniums. opinion hecomes difficult to resist, even if it is ill-informed. The authorities may be forced to act against their hetter judgment. Something of the sort happened over cyclamate artificial sweeteners. The bulk of scientific opinion now regards the hurriedly imposed ban as unjustified.

The traditional use of nitriles to preserve and colour meat is another sensitive issue at the moment. Nitrites can combine with substances naturally present in food to form potent cancer - producing chemicals called nitroaamines. To what extent this actually happens and whether it is of any significance is still unknown. The possible but unproven dangers of nitrites could easily be huilt up into a major scare. The temptation to keep hack isolated awkward experimental results until the situation is clearer is ohvious.

But it is a dangerous tempt-ation to yield to. In the narrow sense the result of an isolated experiment may he a valuable warning. It is better to ban a few food additives unnecessarily than to delay the publication of experiments concerning a drug like Thalidomide.

In the wider sense it is contrary to the principles of a free soclety that any group of people, however expert, should deliberately withhold information in which others have a legitimate interest. Decisions should he arrived at hy making as much information as possible available to as many people as possible.

And, as Dr Mellanhy pointed out, muzzling government scientists may have exactly the opposite effect to that intended. Among their number are many of the hest informed people in the country on environmental people to reply to the prophets of environmental doom who minister concerned and his department. There is a natural tendency to play the cards as close to the cheat as possible.

The weakness of the UVF is that it has no organisation and little potential leadership. It is made up of individual cells-on average around six men; the higgest the Army has dis-covered, in a small town in east Ulster, has 51 men. A few of the cells have hegun to comhine. The talk of "private armies" around June seems to have heen a reflection of this development.

But in this amoehic organisation, no more than a dozen men have any leadership ahility, one of those half-mad. Six of the dozen are in Belfast, mostly in the Shankill area: these six, in fact, were virtually the Army's only Protestant can-didates for interument. The other six—scattered through Ister—have apparently done title as yet for which they buld be "lifted."

But on one incident—the shooting of a Catholic housing estati from a Protestant-run woodyrd in north Belfast—was heyed doubt the work of a co-ordiated UVF cell.

The only ther traceable involvement of he UVF in those riots was acciental. A small consignment of arms had been landed at Carriffergus, a harhour on the east-past used for Ulster gun-tunning since 1912. The consignment—possibly sten guns—was houd for Dungannon, on the ouskirts of gannon, on the ouskirts of Belfast. Unfortunately, having cached the weapons, he was coming across central Befast, presumably to report, when he hecame involved in a riot and was shot dead hy the Army. Nobody in the UVF can nov find the arms..

But most of the illegal weapons come from inside Ulster. The rifles are mainly .303, many of them modified with .22 harrels—these are allowed to huy cheaply from Stormont in the 1960s. There —again, standard issue with the defunct B Specials. We were told, too, of a few people with Sterling sub-machine guns. The Army is apparently convinced that substantial numbers of grenades have also heen stockpiled by the Protestants. The problem for the UVF, as for most underground armies, is organisation. But in Ulster a ready-made structure exists in the form of the Orange Order, with a disciplined hierarchy and a country-wide network of meeting places, the Orange lodges. Only three months ago, Capt Laurence "Willy" Orr, leader of the Unionists at Westminster and "Imporial Grand Meeter of and "Imperial Grand Master of the Grand Orange Council of the World " confided to a friend his fear that in every Orange lodge there was a group of "hotheads" capable of organising a sizeable force in their areas. (The old B-Specials' organisation is another ohvious framework for action.)

If the Orange Order could provide the geographical structure and perhaps the NCO's. however, men like Grant would lead the hacklash. Memhers of the prosperous middle class-husiness, professional and hig farmers—they have resisted any involvement—political, re-ligious or financial—in the conflict until now.

conflict until now.

There is no sign, yet, of anything approaching a formal cohesive organisation among these middle-class extremists. Like the UVF, they appear to function on a strictly local hasis—small groups of friends, neighbours or husines associates. What little official intelligence exists auggests that intelligence exists auggests that they are concentrated in traditionally hard Protestant areas like Mid and South Antrim, Tyrone, and parts of County Down. Significantly, these are the areas where the Army has always suspected considerable stockpiles of illegal arms.

The social inferiors

There is no evidence that the new extremists are any more politically orientated than the UVF: their meetings are not ahout overthrowing the Faulkner government they would regard Paisley and Craig as socially inferior. If they have any philosophy, it is a simple desire to safeguard husiness interests.

One man who has attended several meetings of these new extremists—all in private homes, rarely more than 6-10 people present—told us that their constant theme is the fear that shops, factories, garages or husinesses of the people there could he the next to be hombed or hurnt out.

The importance of this new extremism is precisely these class and social undertones. Grant, for example, talked of the UVF with contempt and visible social hostility. Very few men like him were in the Arms supply, thouch, has that none of his immediate usually heen smoother than associates had ever hothered that. In the first plae, the to join the local gun cluh, Protestants have, igally, which he appeared to regard enough arms to equip size as an exclusively working-class ahle hacklash. Where ecesorganisation. But there can he little doubt that if Grant B-Specials; and Grant claimed enough arms to equip size—as an exclusively working-class they are not exactly invisible able backlash. Where ecesorganisation. But there can in certain Dublin pubs. The sary, supplies are said tobave he little doubt that if Grant Dublin Government would like come through the two pris. and his like decide to move nothing better than to be able Carrickfergus and Larne—ith against the Catholics—and it is occasional small-boat consenments into Ulster's most poular yachting resort, Strangford ready - made organisations lough. This skulduggery; would rapidly follow their lead.

The leadership of the IRA has always been hard to define. Joe Cahill, the ex-builder whom the popular press built up as 'Public Enemy No 1' never himself claimed to be more than acting chief in Belfast. The existence of two rival IRA wings-Official' and 'Provisional'-plus a great amount of independence of local commanders make definition still harder. Two men in the Republic, however, claim to be overall commanders. They are Sean MacStiofain, head of the Provisionals' Army Council. and Cathal Goulding, chief of staff of the Officials. In interviews with PETER LENNON they reveal their attitudes and discuss their rival strategies. Official: Cathal Goulding of Staff of the IRA.

Goulding began to lead the movement away from Fenian traditions · of violence and towards a more subtle Marxist strategy. MacStiofain, a puritanical practising Catholic, a non-smoker and a non-drinker, clung to the old doctrine of re-uniting Ireland hy the use of the gun. Today, after the division of the IRA into two factions, MacStiofáin works in Navan, Co. Kildare as head of the Provisional Army .council, and assumes responsihility for homhings and shoot ings in the North.

The division hetween the "Red" and the "Green" IRA came into the open at the end of 1969, after the riots which hrought the British Army into Ulster. The Provisionals claim was that the Official IRA had become too pacific to protect the people of Belfast from the fury of the Protestant moh. Although the Officials still hold the policy of recognising de facto, the separate govern-ment of Northern Ireland, the Provisionals' spoken aim is to topple Stormont.

What sort of man is Sean MacStiofáin?

Perhaps it is hecause to an Irish Catholic, a church is as natural a meeting place as a puh that MacStiofain waited for me one night last week outside Donnyhrook Church. Then, we went to a garden flat down towards Ballshridge.
MacStiofáin has a faintly self-conscious military bearing, stubby hair, slightly protruding eyes and a rahbity tight smile. His manner is precise and firm: his replies considered and succinct. There is a latent tension in his manner and a clear suggestion in his replies of a closed-minded stuhborness.

He had to lock the door of the room we were in, not to keep out the Irish Special Branch, hut to keep out an over-eager three-year-old child. The first thing to remember about the IRA is that hoth sides refuse to accept total clandestinity. They consider themselves to he the legitimate guardians of a 32 county Republic, hetrayed hy the Treaty of 1921 which accepted partition.

Only Saor Eire, a group of about two dozen quasi-political hank robhers, are a fully clandestine organisation. But even punctuality for over 100 years. Finally, we decided that we should not merely concentrate our efforts on improving the conventional watch. So we turned to electronics. The electronic watch uses an incredibly accurate tuning fork mechanism. Which you don't need to wind up. And which hums instead of ticks. Before we came along it was the most accurate wristwatch you could buy. But we went even further. We added what we call a «flexion oscillator», which makes sure the tuning fork vibrates with exactly the same frequency, no matter its position on your wrist. Which makes it that much more accurate. Our Eterna Sonic will keep the same accurate time day in day out: less than 2 seconds variance

THE RAMSHACKLE DURABILITY OF THE IRA

Mention any point of policy and we differ from them." The Provisionals go back to the obsessions and to tactics used ouring the British reign in Ireland at the turn of the century. The Gaelle Athletic Association instituted a hoycott of foreign 'garrison games'.
that is rugby soccer and cricket. To prove you were a real patriot you only played hurling and Gaelic football. The GAA ban which also forbade looking at foreign games was a patriotic anachronism which survived, with much rihald comment, until last

"The GAA ahandoned nationalism when they abandoned the ban" said Mac-Stiofáln. Nationalism, of course, dnes not mean obedience to the Catholle hierarchy of Ireland: the Church refuses the sacra-ments to IRA men. "We are Irishmen first and Catholics after " said MacStiofáin.

But there is an obsession with reviving the Irish language, to give the cultural aeal to Ireland's separateness. "If I had a free hand" said MacStiofáin, "I would revive it Stiofáin, "I would within three years."

MacStiofáin is an illustration of a point made to me by the Londonderry civil rights leader, John Hume MP: tbat for many Irishmen, politics long remained frozen at the point of the ahortive Rising in dary heroes who were executed then. "Nationalist politicians I ASKED GOULDING for his assessment of MacStiofáin. 1916, dominated by the legendid not have to put forward any new ideas," he said. "They just had to reiterate the prin-clples of the heroes and if you voted against them you voted against the patriot dead."

If there had been an en-lightened Government in the South it is possible that young men could have been weaned from the old violent traditions. a Government which offered scant social services, a country which until well into the 50's let England take care of its employment problems (and its illegitimate haby problems) and sat soaking in the misty past—chose to nourish the deprived working class on heady heroic myths.

An Important element in the formation of the IRA-still a working class and small farmer Attack and defence gangs of their youth. It was has no time for politics is in the IRA, for example, who my opinion a madman." eliminated the Animal Gang in Although he came from a Dublin of the late Thirties. The traditional Republican family Animals were hooligans who and has a violent history—at were occasionally employed by 15 he was involved in the raid politicians to break up rival on the Magazine Fort in the political meetings and used to Phoenix Park, and he has punish strikers. One night the served a total of 15 years in young IRA descended in force jail—Goulding decided that he on Corporation flats in Duhlin, must stop his followers making dragged out its leaders and shot them in the legs.

Another element is the chauvinistic culture of the Christian Brothers primary schools. Lessons were saturated in the myths of 1916: not only history lessons, but prose and poetry — and, of course, singing lessons. The teaching of Irish was a political gesture. This eventually bored the middle class but the workers, whose education often stopped at primary school level, applied it to the future.

It was, in the end, Cathal Goulding, MacStiofain's com-panion on the botched Essex arms raid, who realised that crude nationalism was getting the IRA nowhere. A new approach had to be made: Goulding, in the early Sixties, hegan to lead the Army on a crusade that soon hecame ideologically unacceptable for many of his colleagues.

"I believe that he is a very rigid kind of person, he is not a person who thinks a lot. A courageous person in a physical sense but at the same time not a person who has got an accurate feeling ahout the situation in Ireland. He was horn and reared in England—I think his mother or grandmother was Irish—he is continually trying to prove that he is as much an Irishman as anyone else. He is a good Irish speaker.

"The thing I have against him is that he is a very narrow man and he is a man who won't accept or examine new ideas and in his rigidity he is convinced that there is only one solution to this problem and that is hy physical force. He has no time for politics of any movement - was the street kind-and a revolutionary who the violence in the North in '69." said Goulding. Before that happened, his own policy was to work with the non-violent Civil Rights movement.

"What we wanted from the Civil Rights movement was certain reforms which would allow us the manoeuvrability that we needed to be able to operate in a political sense. "A political organisation is no good unless it can move openly. Catholics in the North were completely demoralised because of the repressive laws which were aimed directly at them, and we needed to give them some spirit of resistance We also wanted to split the Unionist party. We believed that if the civil rights movement had simple reform objectives that a certain number of Protestants in the North who wanted the regime to look more respectable would support civil rights in housing jobs and voting, etc. But we also knew that there was the "We are not opposed to violence," Goulding told me. "We believe that the violence element which would say 'Not an inch.'

"Once the Unionist party split, if we could have main-tained the civil rights movement along reformist lines we could have split the Unionist party even further. But then we had a split in our Republi-can movement: the Provos felt it was time for armed struggle.

The Provos believe that the abolition of the horder is an important factor in national liberation. But we believe that if the border is abolished and there is an extension of the same kind of system that exists in the South, it would retard the fight for national liberation. It would he handing over the country as a complete entity to neo-colonialism hecause people like Lynch and Faulkner are basically capitalist.

"Our hope is to eventually win or neutralise the Protestant workers. The middle class are emancipated, they can send their children to good schools. they can get good johs for the children because of their busimess or political connections.

Middle class Catholics are the same in the North, The Protestants may get a little more consideration from Government interests but these differences are marginal."

Both Goulding and MacStiofáin emphasised to me that few fighters are sent up from the South. With their easily recognisable accents and lack of intimate knowledge of of an intolerable social climate who are fighting. Although hroad policy might he laid down in Navan, a local commander like Billy Kelly in Belfast would have almost total freedom of action. The Provisionals seem to have become more sophis ticated in their approach (it is licated in their approach (it is likely that one of their hand-hooks is "Revolt" by Menahem Begin leader of Herot, the Israeli Right-wing group). They snipe from comparative safety and none of their homhers has been caught in

In trying to assess the actual orce of the "IRA" in the force North it is more realistic to take the Republican movement as a whole. What Stormont and the army is contending with is a semi-coherent, volatile, improvising pepular movement made up of parts ranging from outraged house-wives and civil righters, to urhan guerrillas. It can he described as rather ramshackle military vehicle, hut which has an unperation with the ordinary ending supply of spare parts. The strength of the terrorists erry and Belfast—in the is that they have at least the rdoyne area for example.

the last phase of a revolution. "But the Provisional use of force seems to he a guiding principle, in that they believe in it more than anything else. People join expecting to do the romantic things like heing out in the mountains with guns or taking military action against the Free State or the Stormont regime. Some of these are now members of Saor Eire. Some of them are socialists, hut they don't seem to have studied Socialism and they think they can impose Socialism out of the barrel of a gun, hut they can't do that. Two months later, they field up the Royal Bank, Arran Quay, Dublin getting £3,270 hut this time a Garda was shot dead trying to prevent their escape; the policeman's death caused a wave of revulsion, and only in recent weeks has Saor Eire heen hack at work on hanks.]

"From the point of view of leadership" Goulding went on, "the Provisionals and ourselves will never get together. But there has been co-operation among what you might call the grass roots of the organisation. Over the past five weeks there has been tremendous co-operation with the ordinary members of the Provisionals in Derry and Belfast—in the Anatomy of a resort.

THOUSANDS of people go to the Swiss resorts of the Volais erery year for some of the best skiling in the world. No two resorts ore the same-Anzere, created in the past six years from nothing; Verbier, sprang up after the wor like a hothouse plant and now run to seed; St Luc, still so small you get the feeling ski-ing might not have been invented; and Zermatt, perhaps the only rilloge to retain its very special cachet. Yet each Volaisan resort has its stock characters without whom there would be no ski-ing. Christopher Motthew describes

The hotelier

A man in his middle sixties, who left the village as a young man to learn his profession in many different towns and resorts. and returned in 1946 to buy bis nwn hotel. A large, impressive figure, he is simultaneously sad and realistic about tourism in Switzerland today.

Swiss tourism has changed a lot in recent years. Ooce upon a tima a visitor was welcomed, given a comfortable bed and good fond, shown the mountained to fool. tains, and generally made to feel at home. In return for his pleasure he would give money. Nowadays I'm afraid you get what you pay for—certainly no more, and occasionally less. But then what hasn't changed in the Valaic?

The villages are half empty now, because the young people have left for the towns. I was brought up to milk and tend the cows, but my grandchildren are terrified of them. Of course there are far fewer heasts inday, anyway. That's why there are so many more avalanches incidentally. In the nld days, the animals cropped the grass in the summer and made little marks in the ground with their hooves, so that when the snow came, it settled firmly on the steepest slopes. Now the grass is long and uncropped, so that when the first snow comes, it lies on top of the grass and bends it down flat. Then one day, whoosh the whole lot slides straight down the mountain. The hotel business in Switzergot to be aware of the material you're dealing with, and allow for differences — the French for instance are nervous and bolshie, the English brave and easy going.

Imagine uying who have spent most of their lives looking after cows, what to do if someone falls off a drag lift, nr if the machine seizes up in freezing conditions. I'm always beling told my ski lift people are surely. The fact is they all land is dead. For a start on one can get the money to build new hotels; and as far as the existand after all what does it matter if somenne can't keep his surly. The fact is they all feet together all the time? How can I offer a twoon boliday, not in a classroom. That's why we in Switzerland like Small? How can I offer a two-week holiday including travel for under £50? If we want to survive at all, we'ra going to have to start working directly with companions for a few daystravel agents and really bave and show them our heautiful something attractive to offer. But to ware the ware that the works are they bear they bear to water they bear they bea try telling that to young to make sure they know hoteliers. They're unrealistic, bow to get down them first.

they're proud, and they're complacent. They think they can go on living on the old clienteic their fathers built up. And yet their hotels are often half empty.

Few people realise we're not only responsible for getting people up, but also for getting them down. That means knowing about electricity, mechanics, snnw and weather cooditions, and a good helping of psychology. If there bas heen a lot of snow, I have to decide which runs to open and which to close, where there is danger of avalanches and how to blow them up. If there is very little snow, I have in make sure things like rocks and hollows just off the piste are well marked.

We can take you skiing in St. Moritz for £30 less than anyone else.

Before you decide who you're going skiing with, it's an idea to shop around to see which company's offering what and at how much.

We'd like to run through just what a Halcyon skiing holiday gives. We think you'll be hard pressed to find one to Starting at the airport, we fly you out in one of our own planes—instead of any airline that happens to be going that way. And seeing as we only fly Court Line Aviation BAC Super 1-11's we can always guarantee you'll travel in style. As for the resorts, we've tailored the choice down to the best 11 going. Places like St. Moritz, Kitzbuhel and

Val d'Isere where you can brush elbows with the skiing experts, or just mess around on the nursery slopes. The accommodation leans towards warmth and cosiness, rather than cool efficiency. And instead of the 'take it or leave it' approach, we offer a choice. If you're looking for fun and games, you can join a chalet party. Or for a bit of peace and quiet and a chance to get the kids off your hands, you can stay in one of our small, friendly hotels, or rent a chalet

The food is strictly Cordon Bleu. No tourist-type menus, and no limit to the amount of wine you can drink. And we still haven't come to the best part. The cost.

VENTURETREK

The WINGS adventure subsidiary, announces their AUTUMN/ SPRING series of specially selected, unusual and adventurous VentureTreks.

SENEGAL AND THE SAHARA

The most interesting way to travel overland from TAMAN-RASSET to DAKAR is via The Hoggar Mountains, Tassili du Hoggar, Air ou Azbine, Tombouctou and Niokola-Koba Game Reserve. River boats, railway flatcars, local air links, all are used in this quest for adventure.

Golden Sands, primitive river ferries, river boats, witch-doctors and Floups. All to be found on this VentureTrek on the West coast of Africa.

SENEGAL-THE GAMBIA-SENEGAL

THE FALAISE de BANDIANGARA Camp and Trek with time to explore the fascinating area of the Bandiangara, home of the extraordinary Dogon tribe in Mali. Visit the Bandiangara Plateau with its ancient caves, tombs and granaries, take the optional excursion to Tombouctou by local air link. All in all, a most unusual VentureTrek. Jet flights from London, all expedition equipment and food included.

A British eclipse

THE UNITED States dominated the triagular swimming international against the Soviet Union and Britian in Minsk which ended yesterdey.

The Americans scored 432 points. The Russians were second with 205 and Britain a poor third

America's Ann Simmons hroke the women's 800 metres free-style world record as she hecame the first woman to swim the dis-tance in under nine minutes.

Miss Simmons clocked 8 minutes 59.4 seconds and her time eclipsed the previous world mark of 9 minutes 2.45 seconds hy Australia's Karen Moras. She easily heat her team-mate 13-year-old Cathy Calhoun, who finished in second place in the race with 9 min 16.95 sec. Miss Calhoun had an American record for the event of 9 min 9.6 sec awaiting ratification. Mark Spitz, one of America's most regular record-breakers won the day's opening event as he took the 100 metres butterfly in 55.93 seconds.

Spitz's time was not up to his world record of 55.01 seconds. Spitz was the sensation of Friday's session when he set a world record 1 minute 53.5 seconds in the 200 nietres freestyle, pacing the men's team to a world mark of 7min 43.33sec.

In the womens 4 × 108 metres medley relay the four Americans medley relay the four Americans -Susie Atwood, Claudia Clevenger, Ellie Daniel and Linda John-aon—broke their own world record. They won in 4min 27.33 sec to crack their old time hy a tenth of a second.

Royal High School FP 3 pts

SELDOM can Royal High School FP havo tasted defeal quite so bitterly. They were outplayed and completely routed at Jock's Lorgey yesterday by their traditional rivals, Heriol's FP.

routed at Jock's Lodge yesterday by their traditional rivals, Heriot's FP, whose forward organisation totally destroyed a completely clueless home pack and whose backs, an exciting combination of pace and skill, overwhelmed a woefully weak defence.

Determined spoiling by the High School forwards kept a dangerous Heriot's side at bay for the first few mioutes and during that time Laidiaw weot very close with a penalty attempt from the touchline. It was not long, though, hefore Heriot's weot abcad as they had promised. In the seventh minute, a poor clearance from Lauric fell to Hogarth. Poor defence let the wioger away and he fed McLeod, who easily scored under the post. Irvine, who had looked the part at full-back after a shaky start, had no difficulty th convertiog.

All the class was on Heriot's side. The High School back division, always the key to their successes, was completely shaded by Heriot's threequarter line which will compare favourably with any in Scotland this season. The class of that attack was underlined by a splendid try in the 15th minute when a perfectly-timed pass from Dall sent Craig streaking away.

when a periectly-timed pass from Dall sent Craig streaking away. He drew as much of the defence as remained and Borthwick's try at the posts was as much a formality as Irvine's conversion.

Irvine added another three points

FOR THE RECORD

Mike Freary, the former UK 10,000 metres record-holder, led Bolton United Harriers to their fourth victory in five years at the Hollingworth Lake 4 x 4 miles relay at Rochdale yesterday.

Bolton, who were without Ron Hill, easily retained their reputation as the North's relay champions. On the first stage they finished second, then Freary took over and at the end of the lap was 400 yards clear. He returned 20 min 22sec, the festest time of the day.

THE LORD'S TAVERNERS, like Lancashire, have had a riproaring one-day season. They have played nine matches and this year the proceeds have passed the £10,000 mark. It's a wonderful achievement, all the more ao hecause it is sustained year after year. The result of hard work. The main problem for the Taverners is rether different to that of hard-up county clubs—it's a question of spending money rather than earning it. Traditionally, the Taverners have handed over the proceeds of their money-raising efforts to the National Playing Fields Association. Count-less projects have henefited.

They help clubs with kit and equipment for grounds and pavilions. In the words of their 12th man Prince Philip, they are at

"No, I can't tell you exactly how much the Teverners' contribute to cricket, but it is about £25,000 a year recently. This autumn we are looking at our whole policy of grants. What we would tike to do is to organise something for young people—something that can he clearly identified with the Tavernera. That's what cricket for hove is That's what cricket for hoys is all about—identification with the great players."

Ian Carmichael, the Taverners' chairman, holds similar views. The great thing is being able to promote occasions on which cricket can happen. Mind you, we can't spend all our money on it, but we certainly can make more available for boys cricket matches. For what age group? I think they should be encouraged as early as possible."

The problem is finding worth-while projects. One thing the Taverners cannot do is cope with a lot of administration. The NPFA have passed money to the English Schools' Cricket Associa-tion, and will doubtless continue to do so. Next season the ESCA, whose chairman is Hubert Doggart, are promoting a new youth competition. They will rely on devoted schoolmasters for their organisation in the regions.

As yet there is no organisation at all to bring together cricket clubs and schoolboys. Certain far-sighted clubs—Pres-ton Nomeds is one local to me in Sussex — promote hoys' matches in the aummer holidays

If a network of volunteers could be recruited, projects could he organised on a national hasis—perhaps with the support of county cricket associations, and with financial help from the Taverners. A one-day tournament featuring Taverners and selected boys would be a fitting climax.

Desperate Surrey lose fast-scoring batsmen in chase for points to clinch title

IT MAY BE tough at the top, but it seems to be tougher still if you are second and needing if you are second and needing just a few points to leap into the lead. Against Hampshire, Surrey won the toss at Southampton weaterday for the fourth auccessive time, but they lost a prectous hour'a play and had to give up all hope of taking the six points they need from their first innings when two wickets went down quickly just hefore tea. Surrey were then 196 for three off 65 overs.

The storm which lashed what

The storm which lashed what used to be called the Gateway to Empire flooded parts of the County Ground earlier in the morning. Hampshire not heing one of the richest of clubs, have no cunning mechanical method of sucking up standing water, and with the ground hard-baked the ground staff hurt their hands and hent their forks in an attempt to get the water away. The pitch of course was perfect—safe under its covers.

Cottam began to howl at Edrich and Stewart, and for several overs the hatsmen were circumspection itself, with Castell swinging the hall in an etmosphere still heavy with moisture.

Cottam delivered a houncer which leapt off the pitch like a ping-pong hall, and there were occasional signs that this was a pitch with more pace than is usual at the Oval. Both players made strokes behind the wicket, Edrich glancing and Stewart cutting and running the ball down to third-man, and the score accelerated to two an over.

Neither hatsmen looked in any trouble against the second-string

After lunch Stewart created gaps on either side of coverpoint against Sainsbury, hy some glorious footwork and by dropping his wrists to ateer the hall wide of the fielder.

He caught up Edrich, who bad heen faster during the morning, the century partnership coming

Then Stewart was stumped yards down the wicket, and we had the stimulating sight of Roope establishing himself as the day's driver. Opinions vary on this Surrey all-rounder, but on this showing his form of the second half of the season makes him one for England to watch; he was certainly an agreeable sight as he stood back and hit the hall straight and wide of mid-off. Castell was the principal sufferer, but he took Roope's wicket when the hatsman skied, and then Younis, also driving, was magnificently caught hy Gilliat diving to his right at cover-point.

The loss of these two strikers together found Surrey in a sad state, their manager, Arthur McIntyre, raising his eyehrows in typical and expressive fashion. They may get five hatting points, hut what happens if it rains . . ?

FOR the first time since 1926, when the famoua Four Musketeers were translating tenuls into French, two Europeans met in the aemifinals of the men's singles in the game's richest tournament, the United States Championships at Forest Hills. Tom Okker of the Netherlands played the Wimbledon runner-up, Stan Smith, "the Leaning Tower of Pasadena," and Jan Kodes of Czechoslovakia met the 1968 champion, Arthur Ashe,

The unseeded Kodes, a man they said could not play on grass, is the first Czech to reach the last four since Jaroslav Droboy in 1948, Kodes has been French champion for the past two years, which makes him world champion on clay. Now he has suddenly flowered as a potential champion on grass.

There are three reasons for this. The first is that he put in a lot of practice before the tournament began. Second, two former Wimhledon champions, Jack Kramer and Ted Schroeder, convinced him that he had the shots to do well on grass and lacked only the confidence. Third, he discovered the importance of getting his first volley into court instead of going for a quick kill. As a result, Kodes has lost only three sets in five matches up to the semi-final.

The Wimbledon champion, John Newcombe, was the first victim of the hard little man from Prague, who still considers that playing on grass is rather a joke—and not a very good one.

But even Kodes has not been the star of the show. That role went, until yesterday, to a 16-year-old girl from Florida calted Chris Evert wbo swiftly earned herself such graphic nicknames as "the ice dolly," The Comeback Kid," and "The Cinderella in Socakers".

In successive matches Miss Evert Like Kodes, unseeded—beat such fine players as Mary Ann Eisel (wbo had six match polnts), Francoise Durr and Lealey Hunt. All three won the first set. Billie-Jean moved me around more than any of my previous matches, said Miss Evert. "The rallies were over more quickly, but I was running more. I've played well, had a lot of fun, and I hale to see it end, but in a way I'm looking forward to going hack to school."

Miss Evert certainly pulls them in. She has raptured the imagination of the public. In the years to come, she and Evonnc Goolsgong, the new coampion of France and Wimhledon, seem destined for a series of mighty hettles. But at Forest Hills we are left today with Mrs King and Miss Casals in the first ell-American women's singlea final since 1958

Piggott hits six

THERE HAVE been many greater St Leger winners than Mrs John Rogerson's Athens Wood; few his superior in courage and consistency of form. Beautifully ridden by Piggott, he led from start to finish yesterday, showing superb courage in the final furlong to hold his old rival Homeric at bay by a length, with Falkland only a head away third.

Not even his warmest admirers could claim that Athens Wood was the pick of the field on looks, and in that respect he was cer-tainly inferior to Valdrague the hope of France and Alderney. I remember in the spring I suggested to Mr Rogerson that his wife's horse might possibly be up to classic standard; "I am afraid be is really only a handi-

It was Piggott's sixth St Leger success. He thus equalled the great Fred Archer's record. It was Piggott's arst classic success this year and his 18th in all. The early leaders were Athens

Wood and Alderney, with Falkland and Valdrague not far behind. Alderney stuck like a leech to Athens Wood and the two were almost level on the turn for home. Halfway up straight though, Alderney bad had enough and a great cheer went up as Athens Wood drew clear.

Valdrague, who has rather a serious weakness in a race horse in that he is distinctly slow, could make no headway at all, but Homeric, who heat Athens Wood at Lingfield in the spring. was poised to challenge, and Falkland was going well, too. Homeric delivered a challenge hoth resolute and perfectly timed.

but Piggott and Athens Wood still had a bit in reserve. Athens Wood had a neck to spare as the winning post was reached.

Like many other good winners, Athens Wood is slred by a horse who is now in Japan. His sire Celtic Ash was sent there io 1970. Celtic Ash in fact had been given plenty of chances, but his record here before Athens Wood had been terribly disappointing. It was a genuinely popular victory as Mr and Mrs Rogerson Moortown, Leeds.

All the giants of the day were there—Hegen and Sarazen, Duncan and my boyhood hero, Abe Mitchell, Compston, Charles and Ernest Whitcombe and an already publicised newcomer, T. H. Cotton. As it turned out, we had eyes for only one man, tall, slim and very good-looking, called Horton Smith. He had the most beautiful rhythmical swing yon ever saw and on the greens the touch of a violinist.

I last saw him when he left our botel in Atlanta after the Ryder Cup match of 1963 to go home to Detroit Next afternion Detroit. Next morning we read in the paper that he had died

No one who saw the last match two years ago at Birkdale will ever forget the cliff-hanging, nailbiting finish wheo, with the whole match all square and their own match all square with one bole to play, Jack Nicklans and Tony Jacklin came up to the last hole to decide the entire issue. decide the entire issue.

Both were on the so-called par

Both were on the so-called par five hole in two. Jacklin putted up virtnally deed, leaving himself a putt which a good many of us in the circumstances could have miased by at least six inches, whereupon Nicklaus had a splendid "go" at the hole to settle the whole match with an eagle three. He shot by, four or five feet past, but to his eternal credit boled the one back and then with a splen-didly sporting gesture knocked Jacklin's ball away.

When I said at the time that everyone must surely be glad that Nicklaus had not missed his putt at such a moment, quite a number of people chided me with lack of patriotism, inferring that I ought to have been praying for him to miss it. Extraordinaryl

Only the aged among us were able to remember another equally cliff-hanging finish in 1933 when Densmore Shute, who went on to win the Open, and Syd Easter-brook. brook, who very nearly did, came up the last hole at Southport and Ainsdale all square, with everyone else in and the whole match all square. They suc-cumbed a little to the pressure with the result that at this shortish par four hole Shute had a putt of perhaps four feet for a four with Easterbrook a few inches Inside him.

Shute missed, so Easterbrook was left with the golfer's nightmare—one single putt to win the entire Ryder Cup match. It was a ghastly putt with e left hand borrow, just like poor Doug Sanders' in last year's Open. However, he boled it like a man, so it was to dear old J. H. Taylor, the British non-playing captain, almost beside himself with pride, that the then Prince of Wales presented the Cup.

The Ryder Cup went each time to the home team till on the same course four years later the Amoricans broke the spell— though it was Cotton who, in what I shall always think of as his finest hour, beat them all for the Open at Carnoustic. The note at Southport was one of restrained optimism. "The Americans," I see that I wrote at the time, "have too many wives. Not that they have brought more than no each but they have than one each but they have brought six in all, together with Master Revolts, aged two. And it is my experience, or rather I have observed it to be other people's, that women on these trips are an encumbrance equivalent roughly to conceding two shots per round."

This forecast, coming as it did, from a bachelor in his twenties, proved to be as inaccurate as it was ungaliant and the United States and their wives end Master

States and their wives end Master Revolta won by 7-3.

I did not go to the first revived match after the war et Portland, Oregon, when we scored a total of one point, but I do recall vividly the 1949 match, not so much for the match itself, at Ganton, but because the American team came over on the Queen Elizabeth, and so, returning from the Walker Cup match, did I. Incidentality, every one of the Incidentally, every one of the American team had seen scrvice in the war and the smallest of them, Johnny Palmer, had sur-

My own principal memory is of sojourns in the ship's Turkish bath with the great Ben Hogan, who in February had had his famous motor accident. Both his legs were bandaged from hip to beel and he could only just walk. I referred to him jocularly hut incautiously as the non-playing captain, which of course he was, but I soon saw I had sald the but I soon saw I had sald the wrong thing.

His steely-blue eyes narrowed and his lips tightened. "This life is driving me crazy," be said. "I want to compete again." I thought, but this time did not say. "You needn't worry about competing again. You'll never play ogain." He won the US Open the next two years and in 1953 won not only that but the British Open as well.

Twice after this they played the Ryder Cup match in the Californian desert, which in 1955 was almost virgin territory, since they had not long discovered that the so-called desert was, in fact, unbelievably fertile soil waiting only for water, which itself was waiting only to be pumped up.

Thunderbird was at that time one of only two courses. When we were back four years later, there were 15 and heaven knows bow many there are now. I remember Thunderbird particularly for the fact that they had some 200 electric earts, many with tasselled ewnings, in the "buggy stables" and, perhaps the local rule to end all local rules. What now are our chances this coming week-end at St Louis? Apart from a certain amount of controversy over the last placeand after all, what are selectors for except, for better or for worse, to select? We seem to have the best team we can raise. Since the war we have once won end last year halved the match at home, but can never honestly be said to have looked like winning it in America.

The resolute Erie Brown and his men—I do wish be would not refer to them as "the boys," but perhaps I am old-fashioned—may be relied upon to do their damndest and the best of luck to them

THE OBITUARY notices have been propared; only the essential statistics have to be added to complete the pocture of the League of Ireland's annual brief encounter with the main stream of European soccer which begins on Wednesday when five clubs will be involved in extra-curricula competitions.

that it is difficult to see them taking the intrictive On paper the European Cup game between Cork Hibernians and Borussia Moenchengladbach looks like being another one-sided affair. The West German champions, eliminated on penalties by Everton in last year's competition, will take 16 players to Cork, including mine full internationals. Such a show of strength seems extravagant.

Certainly there has been nothing in Hibernian's performances this season to suggest that they can achieve a sensational upset in a cup competition that is unique for its absence of giant-killing flukes. However, Hibernians, even if their emphasis on the physical dismays the purists (including the German coach who saw them lose to Waterford two weeks ago in their worst performance for years) are the most professional side League of Ireland toothall has produced in recent years.

As such they should respond to the stimulus of the occasion and their defence may be sarong ensuigh to frustrate the ball-laying Ger-mans, at least in the birst leg. Historians' officials reject suggestions that their strategy will be entirely negative. We played open football in both games against Valencia in last year's Falty Cup," says John Crewley, the club secretary "and year ways hearter for the company of the company says John Crewey, the club secre-tary, "and we were besten 6-1 on aggregate. But the score should have been a lot closer and we might even bare won out there if we had got some of the breaks. Our supporters will expect us to do the same on Wednesday night and we won't let them down."

They wen't if they ignore the testalive approach that occasion-football.

The Texaco Cup also starts on Wednesday. Even though the competition is a non-event, any friendly cross-border activity is welcome at this time. The popular Bertie Peacock and his efficient Coleraine side are always welcome in Dublin and this week's visit should be a successful one as their opponents. Shamrock Rover, have been floundering badly since the season started. Waterford, who go North, should make it a double for the visitors at the expense of Ballymena United.

Dungannon make it

by John Woodward

THERE was a time, not so long ago, when a Belfast club, undertaking a fixture at Dungamon, had to allow at least 90 minutes' travelling time each way along a tortuous road with almost inevitable Saturday hold-ups et Lisburn, Lurgan and Portadown.

Then came Ireland's first motorway and immediately Dungannon was almost on Belfast's back door 40 minutes to the west with no delays, no frayed nerves. This has undoubtedly contributed to the growing prosperity of rugby in the County Tyrone town, and it is the local club's good fortune to bave been able to build their new ground. All around them Dungannon watched with envy as senior clubs and some juniors, too, both old and new expanded and developed, built new pavilions, opened new grounds. In this respect Dungannon were perhaps slow starters, but they have more than made up for lost time over the past two years.

Prudent enough to realise the profits that can accrue from a well-run club bar, they started their pavilioo complex with this and little more. Then came the contractors to level and lay the first of two pitches before the builders relurned to complete the pavilion.

Sweet Success

EVEN Peter Gethin could hardly have appreciated the full, frag-rant smell of success to be reaped from his first Grand Prix victory in Monza last Sunday.
Yardley, the international cosmetics and toiletries people (who admit to putting £100,000 into the BRM kitty over the last two years) BRM kitty over the last two years) had allowed their sponsorship eye to stray in recent months towards a "new" Yardley Formula 1 competitor. "Motor racing for us is a marketing tool, not a means of patronising the sport," comments Yardley PRO Martin Cartwright somewhat soberly. "Our contract with BRM was for an initial two years, with an option on the third, which will be discussed at the end of this be discussed at the end of this month. It is true that there was talk of a new car heing construc-ted near Norwich."

However, since the new car is unlikely to be ready for another year, Yardley acknowledge that the Italian win, following Jo Siffett's BRM triumph in the Austrian GP, could turn their back to BRM And Cethin heads back to BRM. And Gethin was astute enough to promise Yardley European executives immediately after winning that the car still has further development pntential.

Coincidence or not, Yardley claim dynamic sales to Belgium after last year's BRM victory there; and also that their latest men's product range, unveiled at Easter at the time of the late Pedro Rodriguez' win at Alton Park, has sold beyond estimate and re-orders are underway. Presumably all this puts BRM hack ioto pole position when Yardley decide how to off-load their publicity mooey.

At Bernley they put his name on the programme even when he'd heen injured all week. They'd push him on, strapped up and full of cortezone. They feared half the crowd wouldn't turn up half the crowd wouldn't turn up if Ralph Coates wasn't playing. At Burnley he was even asked by the manager which players he fancied as the team's front

At Spurs he's just another star. Imagine Bill Nicholson asking anyone to help him to pick the team. At Spurs they don't want him to be an individualist, running all over the park as the fancy takes him.

So far, with a month of the new season gone, he could he said to be still fitting in, though in the last couple of weeks he's hegun to overcome several problems and is at last showing what he can do

Fitting in for a footballer takes four forms. The first is the drag of finding somewhere to live. In Burnley he and his wife Sandra (an occupational therapist) and (an occupational therapist) and two-year-old daughter Lisa had a luxury bungalow surrounded by fields. Down here they're living in an npstairs flat in the draggiest part of Palmers Green, right on the main road. problem, getting on with the lads. He's had to take his fair share of teasing. During pre-season training he was told by Cyril Knowles (as if anyone would helieve Cyril Knowles) that at Spurs yon have to turn np in different clothes every day. As he'd only hought one new floral shirt, to atun the Londoners, he was very worried.

But from the beginning, Coates has become a new hero. You can feel them tensing with excitement, willing him to do well, applauding every hurst. Bill Nicholson says be knew they'd love him. He's a worker who runs his heart out and crowds love that. His short legs help, making him appear to run even faster.

Going up to Wolves for the first League match they naturally travelled first-class and ate at the best hotel. "At Burnley, Ralph, did you hring your own sandwiches? What was it like hitch-hiking, Ralph?" Ho ho. But the jokes revolve round him heing new not because anyone is But the jokes revolve round him being new, not because anyone is unfriendly. which most agreed he had his best game so far, they were still getting in the digs. "What's it like having a winning bonus, Ralph?" "It'a all a dream," said Ralph, beaming. Compared with Burnley it was—three wins on the trot, and three times in a row on TV.

The third problem is the fans.

The third problem is the fans, Mullery and Chivers took a long time to be accepted by the Spurs crowd and were very unsettled.

At Spurs the crowd has other stars they love particularly at this moment the Big Fella, Chivers. "At Burnley they just used to shout my name. I felt great when shout my name. I felt great when I ran out. It didn't matter that there were only 12,000 there. I felt I couldn't do a thing wrong with them on my side. Before a match people would stop me in the street and shake my hand and say 'Can you do it for us, Ralph? Can you heat this London lot?' I'd say 'Of course. We'll hammer them'."

They didn't and week after week Burnley went further down. Being a star, he felt responsible, knowing how much the crowd expected of him. The worry of continual defeat, and then of described for the state of the s motion, finally reduced him to sleeping pllls.

The fourth and most important problem is playing. At Burnley they fitted in round him. At Spurs he's had new orders and new functions. 4 JUMP JOCKEY'S ABILITY. When taking the steeplechase fences (A) in the cross-country speed and endurance phase, Anoe moves slightly back in the saddle and maintains the lightest cootact with the horse's month (B) to allow him the maximum freedom as he comes down. Good steeplechase jockeys go over a jump like Becher's at Aintree the same way.

to keep calm in difficolt situations.
Coming out of the Troot Hatchery example, Doublet had to struggle up the bank hnt Ame sat quietly, never changing her position in the saddle and giving her horse the ntmost freedom to get himself out of trouble. Some riders might have panicked, kept the horse on a tight rein, and brought about a fall.

6 ADAPTABILITY. Anoe has a remarkable facility for adapting her style to the event in which she is taking part, and her perfect postitioning in the saddle for show jomping is very reminiscent of the way Marion Mould jumps Stroller.

had given up hope of her competing at Eridge in August (the final trial for the European Championships), only to find her sitting up in hed making plans for a crash get-fit course to be in time to ride.

It is a determination she has long showo. One of her former trainers remembers that as a schoolgirl she fretted at having to put up with safe horses and that she was not really happy until she got one named Cochrane, which did not jump straight. It was just the challenge she wanted. The training Anne experienced then was a tough army-style drill, emphasising dressage classes rather than individual lessons and hacking across country.

Anne has never had the choice of bost horses, but the early discipline has paid its own dividend. Anne will work at dressage, for example, in the early morning, when many of her contemporaries are possibly thinking about going to hed. She has demostrated the dhillty to relax hefore the final all-out effort to win on the last day in the show jumping arena and proved her "nerve" across country. The last is the most telling characteristic.

"Plenty of people are prepared to risk their necks racing or out hunting in the heat of the moment," says Richard Meade, "but they would think twice about tackling big fences on their own in cold blood."

Footballers on the pill

AT LEAST 40 Football League players are already on a pill which, it transpires, was the basis of a sizable medical gamble taken by the England World Cup party in Mexico. The pill, called soaium, a nariii effective new salt tablet could ensure that never again need a marathon runner or cyclist flake out through heat exhaustion, and never again need our own footballers collapse with cramp on the Wembley turf or anywhere else.

Since Sir Alf Ramsey's studiously prepared team acted as guinea pigs, and proved the practicability, efficacy and complete freedom from after-effects of the slow sodium tablets, it has become the most sought-after medical aid in informed football circles. It has taken until this weekend, and an article in the British Medical Journal, for the details of the Mexico experience to be revealed.

England's experiment was dramatic. They needed something

Manchester City won. They used the tablets to outlast West mud. Macchester City won. They used the tablets to outlast West Bromwich Albion in the 1970 League Cup floal; they won again. And they used them last Wednesday night when they came back from 3-1 to beat Wolves 4-3. The players firmly believe the pill gave them the edge in stamina; the skill of course was already there.

Lee enthuses: "Nine out of ten of our boys take four tablets before every match. We are not quit sure what it does for us, but it's like all athletes, if you Raymond Brooks-Ward

The valuable pill is principally succeeded for Er the result of the work of Pro-fessor Hugh de Wardener, who chester City an needed a slowly dissolving salt tablet to keep kidney patients alive in Fulham hospital. seeking a public platform from which to convince CIBA, the Swiss pharmaceutical organisa-tion, of the marketing value of tion, of the marketing value of this tablet, slow sodium. Tennis might have provided that platform, for the professor was appalled seeing Wimbledon players "visibly suffering ohvious aalt deficiency"—cramp and muscle weakness. But then he saw a report of England footsaw a report of England foot-hallers' plight on the 1969 tour of South America. He immedi-ately contacted Sir Alf Ramsey and Dr Neil Phillips, the England team doctor, and they began experimentation with the World Cup finals 10 months ahead of

"Certainly we took an element of risk in Mexico," concedes Dr Phillips, "but we had no choice. On the South American tour five players, among them Bohby Moore, were quite seriously affected by acute salt and water depletion — giddiness, fotigue, nausea, vomiting, weight loss and cramp.

In Guadalajara slow sodium became routine. Among the hoots and kit flown out were 20.000 tablets—in size and appearance like white-coated Smarties. In temperatures hovering around 95 deg F daily "weigh-ins" revealed an average weight loss of six to seven pounds in a 100-minute training stint (equivalent to five pints of sweat loss mainly to five pints of sweat loss, mainly salt and water).

A Danish dossier ready for Celtic

I DO NOT suppose it is a particularly charitable attitude, but for those of us travelling with Celtic to Copenhagen this week, there is a satisfying revenge in prospect.

It is not so tong ago that we were in Denmark with the Scotland international side, an unhappy trip altogether, and the Danes were apt to be just a bit patropising over the troubles of poor old Scotland. Their national side made the point even more clearly on the field.

For some time now, though the reputation of Celtie has helped to balance that of Scotland and we may be forgiven for anticipating, with a certain relish, the restoration of the balance was again as Wodnesday balance yet again on Wednesday. Copenhagen Boldsklubben, the Danish elub unfortunate enough to be drawn against Celtie in the first round of the European Cup, appear to have nn chance worth discussing.

It was unpleasant but burdly a shock, when Scotland lost in Denmark: it will be noted with permark: it will over Europe if Celtic do not put the Danes very firmly in their pince. The way Celtic have been playing they could easily be rated favourites for the European Cup Itself.

for the European Cup Itself.

This is not to say that Cettic wilt be teaving Glasgow on Tuesday in a hollday mood. For one thing they wilt not have time to relax. Their flight leaves for home a conple of bonrs after the end of the game. For another, Jeek Steln regards complacency as one of football's deadly sins.

It had been ganerally supposed that be would put Boldsklubben in a very low category by omliting his usual "spying" trip, but he was, in fact, planning to watch them today—"You never know, they may have something sensational. We're taking no chance."

On reflection, this is probably less of a compliment than a threat, RANGERS, almost literally, will be on rather more dangerous ground. Rennes is a pleasant little town, widely known as the starting point for pigeon races, and hir Michelin looks kindly on the hotet where Rangers will be for many years (how ironic for the nation where the European Cup was born) their clubs cannot be treated lightly.

The Rennes club, no doubt conscious of a responsibility to the prestige of La France, seem to have been taking the responsibility very seriously indeed; too seriously, Willie Waddell might say. I have the feeling that he is not ton happy about reports that Rennes have managed to register a couple of Yugoslavs in time to Reines have been a couple of Yugoslavs in time to play against Rangers in the Cup-Winners Cup on Wednesday, and Winners Cup on Wednesday, and would not blame him elther.

(Jock Stein goes spying)

As he says, there is nothing Rangers can do if the registration of these players has been accepted by the European Union. He refuses to foin any controversy. Yet the situation does have some undesixable aspects. We remember, for instance, how the French coach was saying a conple of weeks ago that the Slavs would not be eligible.

weeks ago that the Slavs would not be eligible.

It is no small consideration. Mosjoy has been capped ten times by Yngoslavia in recognition of his scoring efficiency, and Kobecheck has nine caps as a midfield man. Waddell has seen Rennes in action, hnt any judgments made that doy are probably rendered out of date by the arrival of the reinforrements.

Maybe irritation will lend just enough extra urgency to Rangers on Wednesday. At any rate, the Arsenal's shooting was more accurate, as shown when Storey brought a diving save from Harvey in the 60th minute and, secoods later, Radford whistled a fiercely struck shot inches past an upright. In the front running of Radford and Kennedy and the steel of Arscnal's men in midfield, the 51,000 fans had plenty to keep them happy. But as for the quality of the game, neither team can take much credit. Three men were cautioned, Com of Rangers, was orderer off, and even these dismal statistics do not reflect the extent of the bad temper and niggling, petty fouls.

Pre-match speculation about tha team selections always a considerabla topic before any Old Firm game, was resolved dramatically with the announcement that Colin Jackson was not merely fit, but would take over at centre-half for Rangers in place of McKinnon, who has been showing signs of unreliability lately.

And Andy Penman, one of the most gifted players on the Rangers staff—aithough perhaps lacking in strength—was brought in presumably to calm things down a bit in the middle.

Jock Stein switched his full-backs right from the start, thus giving the uncompromising Repean the

But if this signified the deflant mood of Rangers, Celtic were no less agressive, no less determined. This attituda was personified by Tom Callaghan, who looked capabla as well as willing to take on as many blue jerseys as possible, and from one of his moves, Celtic won a free kick on the edge of the box. That was in the eighth minute, and Murdoch measured the distance with absolute precision. Macari promptly headed a goal which, although beautifully taken, said little for the covering of the Rangers defence. It should be said, however, that in the minutes immediately following, the Celtic defenders in turn, were some way short of perfection, permitting the ball to bob around dangerously within easy range of Williams, and indulging in passbacks which showed a remarkable faith in the graphscene.

backs which showed a remarkable faith in the goalkeeper.

And fouls were all too frequent Had Colin Stein been cautioned for one bitter tackle on Hay he could have had no cause for complaint. Hay, of course, can well look after himself, but that's not the point.

Incredibly, in view of his recent exploits, Jimmy Johnstone was finding it hard to make any impact, and Rangers could have boped for no greater encouragement than that, as they battled to regain equality.

There was one Johnstone mis-

Callaghan meanwhile remained in wonderful form. Conn had been detailed to mark him, but that was a thankless task indeed. Callaghan was working with impressive energy in midfield, and still finding time to worry McCloy with his long-range shooting.

So the excitement was as high as ever. Unhappily thera was no sign of any improvement in diplomatic relations so to speak Jardine and Conn were cautioned before the half hour was up, and there was one collision between Hay and Jardine which ended with both men on the running track.

Then in the 32nd minute, came the equaliser, and the first goal Rangers have scored egainst Cettic in three matches. The fact that it happened to come from a penalty course, decided the last two metches.

The secret was hardly unconnected with the abeer hard work of Conn and MacDonald, supported by the coolness of Penman. They were using the speed of Johnston on the right to find effect, too.

All this work in fact did not deserve the blow that fell in the 55th minute. It is said that goals should simply not be scored from corner kicks these days. Certainly Celtic's second goal should never have been scored.

McNell besded on a Callaghao corner and Dalglish—who had been Celtic'a best forward—had far too much time before scoring from about 12 yards out. Willie Waddell chose that moment to substitute Tommy McLean with Willie Henderson.

Conn was sent off in the 69th minute, and one felt that worse offences than his foul on Calleghan had good oopunished. But it is as least arguable that he might have stayed on had Mr Paterson remembered his previous caution when calling him over.

From that point to the end, both sides appeared more coocerned with avolding defeat than achieving victory—until, just on time, Jimmy Johnstons headed in o flick from Daighsh.

Upton Park was well rid of the several dozeo hooligans who were ejected by the police from the North Bank in the hour before kick off. They missed a scintillating match, which, in the first half alone, produced skills, thrills and entertainment in con-stop abundance and just about everything except goals. except goals.

Controversy was present at a high degree when, after 14 minutes Robson met Brooking's ceotre from the right with a header that gave Phillips no chance. To most observers the ball appeared to rebound out from the stanchions at the back of the oct. Others thought it rebounded down over the line from the crossbar but referee P. R. Walters saw neither such happeoings. While West Ham players were still congratulating earh other on the goal, he signalled for olay to continue, which it did to Cheissea's satisfaction.

Apart from Garland hooking just wide from Osgood's header—the stamp of £100,000 was written all over his effort—Chelsea were on the receiving end for a long spell. Phillips saved superbly from Robson twice and Brooking, and Chelsea's crosshar was shaken when Brooking thundered in a shot.

Approaching half time, Chelsea stamp of £100,000 was written all played themselves back as an atlacking force, and Ferguson dived across his line to save Boyle's searching long shot.

That one of the season's most skilful and exhiberating matches skilful and exhiberating matches had still not produced a goal after an hour was due to Chelsea goal-keeper Phillips more than anyone else. He resumed in the second half as splendidly as he had played all through the first and now Best, the big Bermudian, was the principal West Ham sufferer.

cipal West Ham sufferer.

Phillips was at the near post to block Best's crashing angled shot, and from the corner, by Ayrls on the right, Best hit a magnificent drive which Phillips tipped over the bar. West Ham were increasing pressure move by move, minute by minute, and just on the hour they got the dividend of a goal, with Best the scorer.

It stemmed from a corner on the right taken by Ayris. The ball was played out to Best on the edge of the penalty area, and the previously unbeatable Phillips stood or the penalty areo, and the previously unbeatable Phillips stood no chance.

West Ham were good value for the lead and they continued to atretch Chelsea, particularly through liny winger Ayris, who gave Harris an awful chasing.

With Ospood and Garland now less in evidence, Chelsea's hopes of an equaliser were receding but a free kick after 74 minutes put them level. Boyle tapped the ball a yard to Hollins and his 25-yard shot slipped through Ferguson's hands. So Hollins scored for his fifth match in succession, thanks to Ferguson's involuctary assistance.

Eight mioutes from time Best pulled out another fine goal for West Ham, but this time Phillips looked partly to blame. He stood in two minds as Hurst centred from the right and Best, outjumping Webb, planted a powerful header inside the far post.

Obstacles on way to Munich

by Ralph Flanagan

WHILE Ireland may have been unlucky to be beaten 2-1 by Belgium in Brussels on Friday, it is nevertheless true that they will be under considerably more pressure against France in this afternoon's meo's hockey international at Le Touquet. Ireland have applied for one of the 16 places in next year's Olympic games in Munich, and they went on this short Continectal tour boping that good results against teams rated fourth and fifth in Europe would improve their chances of being accepted.

That reverse in Brussels has not being accepted.

That reverse in Brussels has not helped, and France, semi-finalists in last year's European Cup tournament, will prove an eveo more testing hurdle. The leams last met in the final Group C match in Brussels exactly a year ago, and while Ireland were rather unfortunate to lose 1-0 by way of a deflected shot following a penalty corner, they did not then abow the attacking resources to test the French blanket defence.

Committed as they are to a 1.4-2-3

Committed as they are to a 1-4-2-3 formation, Ireland will be relying on the speed and skill of young: forwards Alan Tolerton—be scored against Belgium on Friday—and Terry Greeg, backed up in break-aways by linkmen Stewart McNulty and Derek Shaw.

and Derek Shaw.

One goal may be enough to decide what should be a defensive game, and if Ireland can make a decisive breakthrough early enough, coach John Robertson is confident his defence has the ability to hold the advantage.

A more tricky obstacle to Ireland's Olympic aspirations is likely to be fought out by the administrators in Duhlin next month, when the Irish Hockey Union will be asked formally to approve the application for entry. The Ulster branch, most cowerful of the four constituent bodies, have already discussed the implication of their players going to Munich as part of the Eire leam, and taken a firm of the Eire leam, and taken a firm

They have informed the irish. Hockey Union that they will not support the venture in any form, and there is speculation as to whether this will affect players affiliated to the Northern branch. At the moment, Ulster supply almost half the members of the Irish team, including all the forwards.

Southern officials realise the Ulster delegates to the meeting on Oclober 30 will vote against the proposal, but bope they will allow individual players to make their own decisloo about committing themselves to the Olympic campaign.

. and so bitter Braithwaite gets a motel

NEXT SUMMER visitors to the Lake District Notional Park will be able to stay at a brand new motel. But should its construction ever have been allowed? The issue involves the conflict between local people who said "no and commercial interests claiming to cater for holidoymukers. An Insight Consumer Unit investigation shows how easily the principles behind the notional parks can be diluted

THIS IS the story of a development in a beautiful area where the "normal democratic processea" were scrupulously followed. And that is precisely the point. Despite bitter local protests, a 35-car motel is going up in the sleepy Cumberland village of Braithwaite (pop. 500)—and the question of whether or not it was needed did not receive adequate consideration from the Lake District

It all seems a far cry from 1947 when the board was set up. Then The Times reported that its main function would be to pay "special regard to preventing unrestricted building and commercial development." development."

The affair of the Braithwaite motel began two years ago when Jennings Breweries, a local company already running pubs and hotels in the Lake District, applied for permission to build in the village. As a national park, the Lakes have a single planning authority, the Lake District Planning Board, and it was to this body that the application

The procedure which the board then followed was technically faultless. In April of last year it circulated details to the 27 bouseholds nearest the motel site asking if they objected to the pro-posal. They all did—but the hoard's responsibility was simply to seek their views, and not necessarily to oct on them.

In October 1970, the board duly granted Jennings outline planning permission; and despite fierce local opposition to the motel, final planning permission was granted in February of this year. Work began on the site at 5 am on March 30, waking up the neighbours and in time for the foundations to be laid on March 31—the very last day on which Jennings were able to qualify for the grant they are getting from the English total of 35 bedrooms. The huildings will be among the largest in the village.

But today, as construction continues in Braithwaite, several doubts remain about the part played by the Planning Board. For a start, did it over-ride local opinion too easily? Opposition was fierce and extended far beyond the 27 most affected bousebolds. A referendum organised in the village by the local parish council showed that 153 of the 169 families in Braithwaite as a whole objected. (Of the other 16 families, 10 were in favour of the motel, and six did not vote.) Among other reasons they resented the fact that the motel would occupy the only green space in the village.

Cockermouth Rural District Council—which covers a large part of rural Cumberland—supported the villagers; all 38 councillors (of whom only one came from Braithwaite) consistently opposed the board And the local headmaster was very much against it. The village school stands directly opposite the huilding site and within yards of an awkward road junction where a child was killed a few years ago.

As a result there is already a sign saying: "Warning—concealed corner."

The villagers were also worried about the strain the motel would put on the local sewage facilities. Last November Cockermouth Council reported that Braithwaite's sewage was "grossly overloaded."—but the heart has no plant to improve the facilities. but the board has no plans to improve the facilities before 1982.
All these points were raised by the villagers in an unsuccessful campaign to stop the motel. Though their case was clearly based on partisan considera-tions, its importance was acknowledged in the hoard's 1970-71 annual report: "The board never lightly go against local opinion." This time they "regretfully" considered it their "duty" to do so. We asked the board what overwhelming advantages prompted this decision. A spokesman appeared genuinely unable to tell us any.

Was it because the motel was necessary, viability of such projects, the spokesman replied.

Had the board perhaps conducted a recent inquiry into the need for hotel beds in the area, and found a shortage? we asked encouragingly. The spokesman allowed that they had not.

Yet the board admits that it was a major decision. In a letter to the local parish council last October, the clerk wrote: "This application (for planning permission) has received more attention . . . than any other application in recent

If this is true, then one can only wonder bow much care is taken over others. In this case, for example, the hoard used in its preliminary discussions a map of Braithwaite drawn as long ago as 1925—a fact which came to light when the 27 neighbours were sent the outline plan, and found in many cases that their own houses were not marked. A 1967 map was available.

Moreover, at least one member of the committee which granted outline planning permission could not subsequently remember the decision having been taken. This was Miss Jean Macinnes, of Carlisle. One of the villagers leading the campaign against the motel, Major Charles Madden, asked against the motel, Major Charles Madden, asked ber about the decision two months after the meet-ing which took it. She replied: "I cannot now remember the actual plan going through on the committee, or what was said about it... We do upwards of a hundred plans in a day, and I'm afraid I don't remember the details going through." Jennings were reductant to discuss the issue-with us; vice-chairman John Musgrave said: "I wouldn't have thought that a newspaper of your standing would hother yourself with a little local fuss like this." He did argue, however, that the motel would ease the shortage of accommodation in the Keswick area. This contrasted sharply with our own findings. Our reporter (plus car) easily found accommoda-tion of equivalent standard in Keswick during the peak August period, and inquiries in the area confirmed that the only difficulties over beds were likely to occur during two or three weekends a

In November, Mr Graham Page, Minister for Local Government and Development, explained wby in a letter to Major Madden: "The Braithwaite issue is essentially a local one and it would be against our policy of encouraging vigorous local self-government to intervene."
